Grand Jurors Free Mellon Of Federal Tax Evasion

U. S. Charges Ignored and Indictment Is Refused.

Decision Reached After Five Hours

Five Witnesses Heard on Alleged Shortage of $716.144.

Pittsburgh, May 8 (AP).—Andrew W. Mellon, pillar of finance and Secretary of the Treasury under three Presidents, today was cleared of a charge of attempted evasion of $716,144.27 in income taxes for the year 1931.

A Federal grand jury dominated by hefty laborers, mechanics, farmers, a carpenter and a plumber—all dressed in their "Sunday best" for the occasion—found the Government's claims against the 79-year-old banker, in effect, "not true."

"The charge was that Mellon:

"Unlawfully, willfully, knowingly, feloniously and fraudulently did attempt to defeat and evade an income tax upon his net income for the calendar year 1931."

But the jury ignored these claims after deliberating only 5 hours, during which time they heard the testimony of five witnesses, three of whom were Government accountants and tax experts and the other two officials of Mellon banks.

Shortly after the findings were announced in Federal court at 10:10 a. m., Mellon issued a 43-word statement saying:

"I am, of course, gratified that I have been exonerated by a jury of my fellow citizens. The fact that the grand jury reached a sound conclusion, notwithstanding the unusual methods pursued in my case, is proof of the good sense and fairness of the American people."

When Attorney General Cummings was informed that the jury had failed to return an indictment, he said in Washington:

"It was for the grand jury to say whether or not the facts disclosed and fairly and impartially submitted, required further proceedings. Evidently they reached the conclusion that there was not sufficient evidence of improper motive to warrant an indictment. This was a function entirely within their province and there is no disposition to challenge the result.

"Very few people, I imagine, were

Blasts Hurt 5 In Mine Strike

Violence Breaks Out in Alabama; Guard Is Increased.

Birmingham, Ala., May 8 (AP).—Roar of shotguns and exploding dynamite shattered the calm of Alabama's coal and iron ore fields today, injuring five and bringing more deputies to trouble center tonight.

Two men were wounded seriously and three others less seriously hurt in this vicinity, where 8,000 iron ore miners are on strike, when dynamite was placed on an ore railway. Three explosions near Coal Valley in Walker County wrecked a power line and threw five towns into darkness, damaging a railroad trestle and a miner's home.

Clashes between union and non-union ore miners were numerous and more than a score of warrants were issued today on information of victims of beatings at Wenonah and Ishkooda mines of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.

The strikers are demanding collective bargaining, a seven-hour day and pay increases ranging from $1 to $2.84 per day.

100 Homes Razed In Rumania Fire

Playing With Matches Starts Conflagration.

Bucharest, Rumania, May 8 (U.P.).—Fire broke out in a crowded orphanage near Bucharest tonight as a result of children playing with matches.

One hundred houses in the village were destroyed. The number of dead was unknown at a late hour.

The orphanage blaze occurred at the historic town of Campulung, former capital of the Valanchia district in the eighteenth century. It spread rapidly, razing the orphanage. Most of the inmates were feared lost in the flames. A church and monastery dating to the eleventh century also were destroyed.

Fire equipment was rushed from Bucharest to combat the roaring blaze, threatening to raze the town.

Post Picture Is Clew To Mother's Lost Son

Last September a Post photographer snapped Secretary Ickes paying off workers on the first District P. W. A. project. A Texas mother recognized her missing son, Altus Nettles (marked X) beside the Secretary, and appealed for aid in finding him. This picture will be used in the search.

Somewhere in Washington, or on a wanderer's road, is a youth for whom the Public Works Administration is about to undertake a far-flung search, with a Washington Post picture as its major clew.

The youth is Altus Nettles, who left his Kirvin, Tex., home last September. Two persons are particularly anxious to find him. One is his mother, the other a cabinet member, Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Last fall, paving crews went into action on Sixteenth street northwest on the first Public Works Administration project in the District. Secretary Ickes visited the job on the first pay day to help distribute pay.

Ford Concern Sues to Retain Low U. S. Bid

Court Told Lack of Code Certificate Likely to Peril Contract.

Fearful lest Secretary of War George H. Dern withhold official approval of its low bid for motor equipment for the War Department, the Northwest Motor Co., Ford dealer, of 6720 Wisconsin avenue northwest, yesterday asked the District Supreme Court to issue an injunction forbidding such a step.

The company, through Attorney Joseph T. Sherrier, informed the court that it was the low bidder on a proposition submitted April 5. The bids were opened April 30, and it was determined then that the Ford bid, as submitted through the Northwest agency, was low by approximately $22,500.

The basis for the fear that the bid will be rejected in favor of the second low bid, it was shown, was that the Presidential ukase calling upon all persons who successfully submit bids for Governmental purchases to accompany the bid with a certificate showing that the code of fair competition not only is being adhered to, but has been signed.

Failure to show this certificate was given as basis for the belief that the bid would be awarded to the second low bidder. The Ford Motor Co. was unable to deliver the required certificate, the local agency said, but it had in all respects abided by the terms of the code and in many respects had exceeded those terms.

The District Supreme Court was requested to issue an order restraining Secretary Dern from rejecting the Northwest bid. No action was taken on the petition, which will have to lay over until service of the suit is obtained upon the War Department and its officers have had time to answer.

Private Lines Fly Mail on Time Again

P. O. Officials Sign More Contracts Today With Other Concerns.

Restored to private carriers on one transcontinental and three Western air routes, air mail was flown, successfully and on schedule by commercial planes yestreday for the first time since the sweeping cancellation of contracts February 19.

Multimotored planes of United Airlines carried 1,800 pounds of mail from Newark, N. J., to Oakland, Calif., where delivery up and down the Pacific Coast was guaranteed "before breakfast time" today.

Other United Airlines ships carried mail from Salt Lake City to San Diego and Seattle, and between the far coast cities.

Postoffice officials announced they expect to sign contracts today with Transcontinental and Western, Inc., and Eastern Air Lines, Inc., two of the newly organized companies, for air-mail service over four other routes, to start about May 1. One of these, between Newark and Miami, Fla., will include Washington and accommodations for passengers between Newark and this city will be doubled.

Meanwhile, the Government, cit-

Mrs. Astor Tells Congress Group Need of "New Deal" for Aliens

Beautiful, ash-blonde Mrs. Vincent Astor, exquisitely gowned in green, yesterday made her first appearance before a Congressional committee and granted her first interview in the hope of snipping some of the red tape in the immigration laws, the Associated Press reported.

Her voice was low and trembled just a little as she told the House Immigration Committee:

"Whether on the quota or not on the quota, we should get the human element into our laws."

Later Mrs. Astor told a reporter why she came down from New York to appear with social service workers for alterations in the immigration laws.

For many years, she said, she has been active in the League for American Citizenship, which maintains 20 branch offices in New York, where immigrants may go any time and tell their troubles. And recently she was placed on the Ellis Island committee, formed to recommend new nad more humane laws for the immigrant, especially as regards deportation.

"From the outset," she said, "I hoped these laws would be changed, and now we have a new deal generally, I hope for a new deal for the immigrant too!

"It is just plain common sense if you want to be humane."

Jail Hospital Holds Insull, Heart 'Bad'

Nearly Collapses During Hearing, But 'Takes It Standing Up.'

Chicago, May 8 (U.P.).—Samuel Insull, worth $100,000,000 a few years ago, was in jail tonight because he couldn't raise $200,000 bail.

The 74-year-old captive was weak and disheveled when he reached the end of a trip from Turkey and became a prisoner in the city where he once ruled as one of the world's leading financiers.

He almost collapsed once during the ordeal of returning under guard to the city which he left two years ago as a fugitive. Physicians said he is suffering a serious heart disease.

"He may last 15 years; maybe only 15 minutes," said his son, Samuel, jr., who is himself under $10,000 bond on charges which grew out of collapse of the $2,000,000,000 Insull utility companies.

Unable to raise the $200,000 bond demanded by the Government, the broken man was held prisoner tonight in a jail hospital ward with six other prisoners, one a 13-year-old boy charged with murdering a 2½-year-old girl.

Private Room Denied.

Insull's request for a "private room" was denied.

"There's no such thing here," he was told by guards at the jail, which confines more men than most State prisons. He accepted his fate philosophically, as he had accepted other unpleasant experiences during a day which he said marked the start of the biggest fight in his life.

Before entering the jail hospital ward, Insull handed $15 to his son, whom he calls "Chappie."

"It's all the money I have," said the man who once couldn't be bothered with "details" involving anything less than a million dollars.

Although he appeared beaten by fate, the former utilities magnate had enough of his fighting spirit left this morning to refuse the offer of a wheel chair when he entered court.

Takes It Standing Up.

face my troubles standing up," he said, and he did, but at one time the strain was so great that he admitted he was on the verge of a collapse.

His son, and the Federal officials met him on a boat in the New York harbor yesterday. He was hurried ashore and put aboard a train. Today he arose at 4 a. m. He chatted with his son and others on the train and was interested in all changes that had taken place in Chicago since he left it.

His train arrived here shortly after 7 a. m. He had to walk to the station, then up three flights of stairs.

"That's the most walking I've done in months," he remarked.

He was hurried by automobile to Guard Foils Theft Of Tunic, Reputed A Relic of Christ

Argenteuil, France, May 8 (U.P.).—An attempt to steal a sacred relic, reputed to be Christ's tunic, was foiled by a watchman here today.

The watchman repulsed intruders after they had wounded him. The tunic belongs to the Argenteuil Basilica, where it has been guarded since the twelfth century.

Since Easter, the relic has been shown publicly and hundreds of cripples and invalids have been brought into the basilica daily seeking miraculous cures. The tunic supposedly was woven by the Virgin Mary.

It is purple, a seamless shirt spotted with blood and showing marks of the cross diagonally across the back.

Dillinger Is Reported Again; Police Load Guns

Chicago, May 8 (U.P.).—Police marksmen loaded their automobiles with machine guns and tear gas tonight and opened one of their intensive "Dillinger drives" after the notorious criminal was reported sighted with several companions on the South Side.

Dillinger's gang of outlaws were believed to have found refuge in Chicago after a sojourn in some Indiana or Ohio hiding place. Dillinger was "recognized" as the driver of one of two automobiles which moved into the city this morning at high speed.

Assassins Shot Down; Bengal's Head Escapes

Darjeeling, Bengal, India, May 8 (AP).—Governor General Sir John Anderson, uncompromising foe of Indian terrorists, barely escaped assassination today at the hands of two Bengalis, both of whom were shot down by police.

One, identified as Dacca terrorists, was killed; the other seriously wounded. An English woman was struck in the leg by a bullet in the exchange, which occurred at a race track in the suburb of Lebong.

Blonde Aids 5 Men Rob Bank in N. Y.

Drives Car to Let All Flee After Grabbing Up $35,000.

Employes Lie on Floor; Manager Made to Open Vault.

New York, May 8 (U.P.).—Five machine gunners and a blonde woman robbed a bank of between $35,000 and $50,000 today in one of the boldest holdups ever performed in the metropolis.

The woman drove a green sedan which swept up to the curb, dropped the five carrying machine guns, and cruised up and down until the men ran to the street with little black satchels loaded with bills and coins. A Brooklyn branch of the Prudential Savings Bank was victim.

The gun squad ran through its task with grim efficiency. They swept into the bank with guns at hip. All wore gloves, to avoid fingerprints. Three wore dark glasses.

Employes Lie on Floor.

One stopped by the door as guard. Two lithely vaulted a low railing leading behind the grill. The other two walked through a small door into the manager's office.

The door guard ordered the half dozen terrified customers to go behind the grill and lie on the floor with three male tellers and Miss Catherine Cicione, stenographer.

One of the bandits nudged Teller Robert Swinnard in the back with his weapon and ordered him to open the vault. The men quickly crammed handsful of coins and bills into black bags. Then they cleaned out the drawers in the teller's cages.

Just then a woman customer entered the bank.

She Says She Can't Wait.

The bandit guard put his machine gun behind him, bowed slightly and said:

"There will be a slight delay, madam. Just take a seat and we'll take care of you in a moment."

"I'm sorry, but I'm in a hurry," said the woman, and bustled out, unaware of the holdup.

As quickly as they came, they fled. The blonde jammed her car into the curb. They clambered in, then shot ahead into traffic and vanished in the direction of Floyd Bennett Airport. In the rush one dropped his gray felt hat, which police hold. A traffic policeman near the bank had waved the auto past, not knowing of the robbery until the alarm sounded a moment later.

Hagerstown, Md., May 8 (Spl.) The mysterious disappearance of dogs here in recent weeks was solved today when Robert McCleaff, Richard Smith and Harry Cheney admitted they were flea gatherers for a local chemical concern.

Everett Shull saw the trio kidnap his dog. He called police.

Equipped with a jar and a fine-tooth comb, the youths admitted that they picked up dogs, combed the fleas from them and delivered them for a price to a local company. They were released on condition they get into some other business. They said they freed the dogs after obtaining their fleas.

First Lady Visits Roosevelt Home

Old N. Y. House Birthplace of President.

New York, May 8 (AP).—With her usual disregard for formality, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt today visited the famous old Roosevelt home.

The house, in downtown Manhattan, was the boyhood home of her father, Elliott Roosevelt, and the birthplace of President Theodore Roosevelt.

Mrs. Roosevelt walked up four flights of stairs to the auditorium in the house, which is maintained by the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Association. Speaking of Mother's Day, she said:

"I think there is no place where Mother's Day could be more fittingly observed than in the house where my Grandmother Roosevelt brought up her big family."

Hot Springs, Ark., May 8 (AP).—Mrs. Anne Cannon Reynolds Smith, who preceded Libby Holman Reynolds, former "torch singer" in marriage with the late Smith Reynolds, youthful tobacco millionaire, obtained an Arkansas 90-day divorce from F. Brandon Smith, jr., here today.

The decree was granted on grounds of general indignities and incompatibility. The suit was not contested, but Smith has filed a suit against Mr. Cannon for $250,000 for alienation of her affections.

79 Die in Car Crashes In Last Seven Months

One of Every 127 Persons in Capital Hurt During 1933; Officials Can't Explain Increase in Number of Fatalities.

By Felix Bruner.

One person out of every 127 in Washington was hurt in a traffic accident last year!

Traffic accidents have taken a toll of 79 lives in the National Capital during the last seven months.

During the first four months of this year, 47 persons have been killed. This figure compares with 24 deaths during the same period last year.

An average of one person is injured every two hours in Washington traffic. Thus far this year, 1,227 persons have been hurt.

Last year 3,866 persons were injured either driving or crossing streets. Eighty persons were killed, nearly half of them during the last three months of the year, when a tremendous spurt in the accident death rate started.

During April of this year 13 persons were killed. Twelve were killed in March; eight in February, and 14 in January.

Of the 80 persons killed last year, 61 were pedestrians. Of the 3,866 hurt, 1,914 were pestrians.

During April, 157 pedestrians were injured and eight killed.

It is safer to ride in an automobile than it is to walk in Washington.

There is more danger of being injured in an accident than there is in contracting an infectious disease. Disease spreaders are quarantined. Accident causers, for the most part, go their way.

District officials are alarmed by the sudden doubling of the number of fatal accidents. They have been unable to give a reason for it. The figures do not indicate that it is a result of repeal. Besides, the increase in fatalities began last October and has continued steadily

Wheat Belt Drought Aid Facing U. S.

100 Pct. Reduction Pay Not to Compensate Farmer Losses.

Thousands of wheat farmers who do not produce a bushel of grain this year will receive checks from the Government.

The reason is that in many sections of the wheat belt drought conditions have become so serious that farmers have not been able to plant spring wheat. In some sections, because of dry weather, the winter wheat crop also has been damaged seriously.

In sections in which it will be impossible to produce crops or in which crops will be limited seriously, the reduction program has been turned into a crop insurance program and the farmers who have agreed to 15 or 20 per cent crop reduction will receive their checks, even though the reduction amounts to 100 per cent.

Heretofore, it has been the rule that wheat farmers who have reduced their acreage must continue to plant wheat in order to benefit from the reduction payments. This provision thus far has been waived in 352 counties in 11 States. More than 35,000,000 acres, approximately 60 per cent of the total acreage signed up in the initial wheat adjustment sign-up campaign, are located in these counties.

Damage Not Estimated.

Extent of damage by drought has not been estimated, but it is expected to be determined rather accurately with the crop estimate due tomorrow.

Thousands of persons who will not benefit from the crop reduction payments are expected to be victims of the drought, with indications that in some sections food crops will be reduced greatly. The emergency relief administration already is checking on the situation, and within a few weeks the Government may find it necessary to launch a great

Senate Votes Down Revision Of Stock Bill

Two Amendment Ballots Indicate Defeat of Future Changes.

By Franklyn Waltman, jr.

Test votes taken in the Senate yesterday, overwhelmingly rejecting two proposals to modify the stock market control bill, indicated that measure would be passed by the Senate substantially as reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, with one possible exception.

The possible change relates to the administering agency.

A move to strike out the provision for creation of a Federal securities exchange commission and place stock exchanges under the Federal Trade Commission seemed to be gaining ground. It is heatedly disputed whether this change would strengthen or weaken the effort to regulate stock trading.

The test votes were taken after Senators Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon, and Frederic C. Walcott, of Connecticut, Republicans, spent a large part of the day sharply assailing those sections requiring filing of reports by corporations. These sections concededly are the most vulnerable part of the bill.

Senate Is Warned.

The two Republicans warned the Senate that the requirements the bill lays down for corporations were so "vague and uncertain" that they had aroused fear in business ranks, and discouraged financial operations to the detriment of economic recovery.

Senator Walcott urged the Senate to keep before its collective eye "the horrible example" of the 1933 securities act, which he asserted imposed such severe and uncertain liabilities that business and industry went on a borrowing strike. Now, he said, the Administration realizes its mistake. He urged that a similar mistake be avoided in pending legislation.

Senator Steiwer cited the letter sent to each member of Congress by

The Powell Junior High School Parent-Teacher Association will elect officers tonight in a meeting at at the school. T. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of the National Capital Parks, will speak on "Beauty Spots of the National Capital Parks."

'You're Gonna Miss Me, Honey,' Sophie Tells King of England

London, May 8 (U.P.).—Sophie Tucker gave King George V the low-down tonight on how she, as the original "Red Hot Mama" singer, put over the old-time "blues" tunes 15 and 20 years ago.

She appeared as a surprise number on a command performance at the Palladium Theater. Her appearance was kept a deep, dark secret until the last minute, when Miss Tucker romped on the stage in old-style manner and went into her song.

Sophie was billed as a "surprise item," although word of her appearance at the command performance had leaked across the Atlantic, and New Yorkers were sending congratulations. The appearance was denied at the theater last night and it was not until the buxom, middle-aged "blues" singer—the grandmother of them all—trod on the boards that it was certain she would sing before the king.

Jack Hylton's Band struck up a jazz tune reminiscent of her heyday as Sophie strutted out into the open and bowed low to the royal box. The applause was thunderous.

With a confident smile and a characteristically sophisticated glint in her laughing eyes, the curvacious comedienne opened up with:

"Some of These Days."

The throaty notes carried through the darkened theater and up to the smiling monarch, who seemed to enjoy the performance from the start as Sophie sang:

"Some of these days-s-s,

Nationalization Talked at Conference With Senate Leaders.

Rider of Thomas To Be Withdrawn

Drafting of New Bill With Treasury Aid Starts Today.

By Elliott Thurston.

In an hour and a half conference with seven silverite Senators yesterday, President Roosevelt narrowed the range of possible silver action by this Congress down to a question of whether the Government will buy domestic "free stocks" of silver at 50 cents an ounce toward "the ultimate objective" of keeping one-quarter of the country's monetary reserves in silver, the rest in gold.

The White House was emphatic in saying that no definite or final commitments had been made to the silverites—though at least one of them, Senator Elmer Thomas, thought otherwise. Further conferences are to take place between the silverites and Treasury officials, who will meet again today to work on the draft of a silver bill.

Meanwhile Thomas is to withdraw his broad amendment, calling for mandatory silver legislation, which is pending as a rider to the Glass industrial loans bill.

White House Issues Statement.

Several of the seven Senators agreed that Mr. Roosevelt has not committed himself. This is borne out also by the statement, dictated by Mr. Roosevelt and issued at the White House, emphasizing that the "possibility" of nationalizing silver and of a future 75-25 gold-silver ratio had been "explored."

The statement said:

"At a conference between a number of Senators, the Secretary of the Treasury and the President, there was further discussion of two points relating to the further use of silver

Circle Tightens In Robles Hunt

Huge Force of Mexicans Clear Hideouts After Tips on Kidnapers.

Cananea, Mexico, May 8 (AP).—A huge encircling movement, designed to "bottle up" the kidnapers of June Robles, was started in this area of Old Mexico today by soldiers, rurales, vaqueros and customs guards after two Arizona highway patrolmen told of locating a house in which the 6-year-old child, kidnaped April 25, recently had been held.

Mexican officials said tonight they have established that "a party of four," including a child resembling June, was in Cananea within the last 36 hours.

The Arizona officers, George Ash and Tom Newell, expressed the conviction she was in the hands of two men who had fled in terror as the manhunters crept nearer their trail.

In Tucson, Fernando Robles, father of the girl, did not comment on reports that agents of the abductors had made tentative overtures to them.

Hard-riding rurales were relied upon to comb the cave-dwellings and shacks of the wild Mexican country and prevent any possibility of overland escape. Along the border other officers watched.

Throughout the night in old Cananea pistol butts banged against the portals of houses and gruff commands of "abre!" (open!) were obeyed quickly by the startled citizenry.

By early morning officers said they had about exhausted the possibilities of Cananea.

AAA Held Invalid By Dairies in Suit

Court Is Asked to Enjoin Milk License Pact.

Chicago, May 8 (AP).—Suit to enjoin Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace from enforcing the Chicago milk licensing agreement was filed in U. S. District Court today in four dairy concerns.

The petition asks for a ruling that the agricultural adjustment act—under which the milk trade is regulated—is wholly or in part unconstitutional. It seeks to prohibit Elmer D. Hayes, A. A. A. local representative, from removing the licenses of the four concerns at a hearing scheduled tomorrow.

The four complainants are the Edgewater Dairy Co., of Chicago; the Joliet Dairy Products Co., of Joliet, Ill.; Anton Michalek and Josef Wagner, sr., both of Chicago.

Insull Placed In Jail Hospital, Heart 'Serious'

the office of United States Marshal H. C. W. Laubenheimer. Silence fell upon the group as it passed the $20,000,000 municipal opera house built by Insull.

Tears Seem Near.

"He looks like he's going to cry," said a boy bootblack, who broke through the crowds of curious and the police line to catch a glimpse of the old man on his way to court.

At the marshal's office, Insull almost collapsed. He lay down on a cot with his wrinkled topcoat for a pillow. Despite warm weather, he wore spats. His once immaculate white mustache appeared to need a trim.

His son summoned the family physician, Dr. Arthur R. Elliott, who later said Insull's condition was serious because of hardening of heart muscles.

Insull slept a while, then went to court, where his attorney, Floyd E. Thompson, former Illinois Supreme Court justice, pleaded for a low bail.

United States District Attorney Dwight H. Green and Special United States Prosecutor Forrest K. Harness, demanded that Judge John P. Barnes make the bond high. They pointed out the Government had spent a fortune while pursuing Insull over Europe for 18 months.

Insull appeared tired and wan. He studied inscriptions on the courtroom walls. Twice, when Green spoke of the "luxury" in which the fugitive had lived, Insull sneered.

Faces 150-Year Sentence.

The two Federal indictments against Insull charged embezzlement and violation of the bankruptcy laws. If convicted on all counts, Insull would face 150 years prison sentences and fines totaling $250,000. The State of Illinois has two indictments against him. An effort to press these charges was blocked by Government officials.

Judge Barnes set bond at $200,000. Insull was returned to the marshal's office with many guards surrounding him to protect him from the possibility of attack by some disgruntled stockholder. One man broke through to Insull and explained, "I just want to shake his hand—I feel sorry for him."

Insull was fingerprinted twice, before court and when he entered the jail. While in the marshal's office, he received this cablegram from his wife, who is in Europe:

"Thinking of you on landing with great love, Edith."

Insull wrote on the back of an envelope:

"With great thanks, Samuel."

Appears Dazed.

After the hearing, Insull waited for his son and attorneys to seek the $200,000 bond demanded. He wanted to go to a hospital or to the apartment of his son. Once he confided "I'd like to go South." Seeming dazed, he called out once more. "Where's Junior?"

In the shadow of the $20,000,000 opera building which Insull planned and built, with elevated trains roaring by on tracks which were built under his guidance, the son of the broken financier couldn't find $200,000 for him.

Sadly, they took him the news. He accepted it philosophically.

"I make no specific requests for favors of any kind," he said before entering the jail which once housed Al Capone. "The Federal authorities are responsible for my treatment and condition while I am held in custody."

Jail physicians who examined Insull agreed with his personal physician that his condition was alarming.

Drought Relief In Wheat, Beet Faced by U. S.

drought relief program in addition to its other relief activities.

The farm administration officials are hesitant about estimating the extent of damage already done by abnormally high spring temperatures and lack of rain. The seriousness of the situation, however, is indicated by measures already taken, which amount in some instances to turning the crop reduction program into a relief program.

It was pointed out that many farm organizations have been agitating for some plan of crop insurance and that this is being accomplished through payments of the wheat checks to farmers even though they produce no wheat. It was argued that under any circumstances the Government probably would be called upon to relieve these same farmers.

Under the plan of waiving minimum planting requirements, farmers who raise no wheat or reduce their production more than the 20 per cent asked by the Government will receive far less in total cash than farmers who are able to produce normal crops. This will be especially true with rising wheat prices.

Wheat Price Jumps.

Already, as a result of the drought, the price of wheat has spurted more than 7 cents in less than two weeks, to around 85 cents, and it is predicted that if the situation continues wheat again will reach $1 a bushel or more.

The crop reduction plan operates this way:

If a farmer has produced an average of 1,000 bushels of wheat over a period of three years and cuts his acreage 20 per cent, receives $151.20 from the Government. In the drought areas he will receive this amount although he does not produce a bushel of wheat this year. If his wheat crop should be up to normal and he produces 800 bushels, he would be able to sell this for $680, at the current price of 85 cents a bushel.

The $151.20 figure is based on 28 cents a bushel for 54 per cent of his normal crop. It is estimated that 54 per cent of the total wheat crop normally goes into domestic consumption and the reduction payments are on this basis.

Thus, a farmer raising no wheat will receive 28 cents a bushel for 54 per cent of his normal crop. A farmer raising some wheat will receive the same amount, plus whatever he can get for his crop on the market.

The drought situation has resulted in the understanding that the wheat reduction program will not be pushed further and that no attempt will be made to take additional acreage out of production.

Without Definite Plan.

It was said, however, at the Farm Administration that no definite plan for further reduction had been determined upon even before the drought situation arose.

A precedent for the present situation arose in South Dakota last year, where there was a subnormal crop. Farmers in that State received only $2,500,000 for their crop, but they received $7,500,000 from the Government.

It was pointed out that drought probably will allow the Government to come well within its London wheat reduction commitments.

A dangerous shortage of livestock feed also is expected. This already is being felt in some sections of the West. Dr. W. C. Coffey, dean Agricultural College, has suggested to AAA officials that the wheat contract be liberalized to permit farmers to plant corn on abandoned acreage.

Eleven States in which the Government has waived minimum wheat growing provisions are Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas and Minnesota. In most instances only sections of the States are included.

CCC to Leave Fort Hunt Free To Bonus Men

Mystery Orders Provide Evacuation Tonight to Fort Humphreys.

For the next two weeks the Civilian Conservation Corps camp, which has been located at Fort Hunt since last fall will be quartered at Fort Humphreys, in deference to the bonus army convention which opens at the former reservation tomorrow.

Orders to have the 125 youths, Army officers and civilian foremen evacuated by tonight were received yesterday by C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks. Rather he heard that such an order had been dispatched.

Where it came from was a mystery both to Finnan and Conrad L. Wirth, assistant director of the National Park Service, in charge of planning. The camp is under supervision of the National Park service.

Ostensibly it originated at the White House, where Secretary Louis Howe Monday gave the Veterans National Rank and File Committee permission to occupy Fort Hunt from May 10 to 24, and was relayed thence to the general staff of the Army, headquarters of the Third Corps Area, commanding officer at Fort Hunt, Civilian Superintendent Finnan and Wirth.

About 100 youths are now housed in the camp's barracks. The normal complement is 200, but 90-odd enlistments which expired several weeks ago have not yet been replaced. The CCC outfit is working principally along the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, clearing brush, pruning trees, installing drainage systems, grading and performing miscellaneous other duties.

Meanwhile veterans continued to arrive in Washington throughout the day and reports were received at the rank and file committee headquarters that others are on the way.

Ten men arrived from California, 75 were reported to be on the way from New York and 50 more are en route from Toledo. A large delegation left Pittsburgh for Washington yesterday, it was said at convention headquarters.

A registration tent will be set up today at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, where the rank and file veterans may sign up for Fort Hunt.

Rock Creek Hikes Begin Again Today

Park Officials Announce Three Each Week.

A new series of nature trail hikes, which henceforth will be a permanent summer feature in Washington parks, was announced yesterday by Superintendent C. Marshall Finnan. They will be conducted every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, starting today, by Irvin N. Hoffman, naturalist of the office of National Capital Parks.

Anyone may participate in the hikes, which will start from Pierce Mill in Rock Creek Park, Finnan said. Two trips, at 2 p. m. and 4 p. m., will be made on each of the three days.

Decision to inaugurate the new feature was spurred by success of hikes conducted last month by Arthur Stupka, who was borrowed from Acadia National Park to conduct the experiment here. During the three waaks' trial, 2,000 man and women participated in the hikes.

Band Concert Cancelled.

The concert by the United States Marine Band, scheduled this evening at the Marine Barracks, has been cancelled due to other official duties.

Play at Gonzaga Friday.

"Lies, Lies, Lies," a comedy directed by the Rev. Harold A. Preiffer, S. J., will be given Friday in Gonzaga High School auditorium.

Auto Crashes Kill 79 Here In 7 Months

Fatalities Grow Although Number of Accidents Is About Same.

since. Liquor did not return to the District until March.

"What is the reason?" William A. Van Duzer, traffic director, was asked.

"Frankly, we don't know," he said. "The number of accidents has not increased.

"But I think everyone who has studied traffic knows the reason for so many accidents. It is not bad mechanical equipment. It is not traffic regulation.

"It is simply dumb drivers and dumb pedestrians.

"There are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of persons driving in Washington and in every other community, for that matter, who have no business driving an automobile.

"A person either can drive well or he can not. No amount of experience seems to make any difference."

The figures show a higher proportion of experienced drivers than of inexperienced involved in accidents.

You Can or You Can't.

"It is something like playing golf. Driving a car requires mental and muscular coordination. Either a person has it or he doesn't have it. If he doesn't, he should not be permitted to drive.

"People forget that driving is a privilege. Too many of them take it for granted that they have a right to drive a powerful engine about crowded streets of a city.

"No one would be permitted to operate a locomotive or to operate even a machine in a factory without a certain amount of qualification and ability to do the work. But everybody seems to think he can run a machine as powerful as a hundred horses, weighing only what one horse weighs, through crowded streets."

Van Duzer was asked whether it would not be possible to educate drivers, to impress upon them their responsibility and the dangers of reckless driving to themselves and to others.

Wants Bad Banned Entirely.

"I'm beginning to wonder whether education does much good," he said. "It simply is impossible to educate some automobile drivers. The good drivers don't need it. The bad ones should be eliminated entirely."

Van Duzer told of an experiment made by a university. He said a group of persons repeatedly involved in automobile accidents were studied as they worked in a factory where they were employed. He said they were involved in far more accidents in connection with their employment than were workers known to be good drivers.

Washington, in common with most places, requires driving permits. Van Duzer said he believed far more permits should be revoked and it should be made much more difficult for a driver to obtain one. He explained that he believed this the only way to weed out persons who simply are not capable of driving.

An indication of the great number who think they can drive, but about whom there is at least some question, is the fact that out of an average of 100 persons applying for drivers' permits every day, 30 fail to pass the examination on the first attempt.

Persons failing, whether from lack of knowledge of the regulations or from inability to drive properly, are allowed to come back at ten-day intervals until they are able to pass. Many of them return several times. Finally, they are allowed on the streets. Among these are a high percentage of those involved in accidents.

Some persons never are able to obtain permits, but are in the small minority. One man applied every ten days for four months, but never was able to show that he could handle a car.

Test Called Too Simple.

The test given drivers is simple—much too simple, according to Van Duzer.

First the applicant is given an oral examination of traffic regulations. He is asked 15 or 20 questions. If he is able to answer these, his eyes are examined to determine the width of his angle of vision. It has been found that some persons can see only straight ahead and are unable to observe objects approaching from the side. Such "barrel vision" persons are rejected.

Then the applicant, accompanied by a policeman, drives for 10 or 15 minutes, stopping at signals and parking. This completes the examination.

"If it were possible, it would not be too much to ask that a driver be required to take an all-day examination," Van Duzer said. "Our examinations are not more strict because we don't have the money to make them so."

Finally, Van Duzer believes that the way to eliminate many accidents is to make drivers' permits much harder to obtain and much easier to lose.

What Causes Traffic Toll to Soar Here

Accidents such as this are sending up the traffic injury and death totals in the District tremendously. Revocation of reckless drivers' permits and stricter regulations for obtaining them are urged as a remedy.

Another of the crashes that are taking their steady toll. The death rate from traffic accidents in the District during the last four months is double that of the same period last year.

Owner of Yacht Mayflower Turns Down Japanese Bid

Wilmington, N. C., May 8 (Spl.). Japan made a bid for the purchase of the Mayflower, yacht used as a pleasure craft by seven Presidents of the United States, but the offer was refused.

The vessel, owned by Henry J. Gielow, of New York, is at this port and in all probability will be towed to Washington to be converted into a floating amusement palace.

Gielow said he had been trying for months to find a purchaser for the Mayflower, but did not like the idea of selling her to Japan for sentimental reason. The Japanese intended to junk her and use the metal she contains for various purposes, one of which could be schrapnel shells. Gielow was quoted as saying that in the event of trouble between the United States and Japan he did not relish the idea of having metal from a ship the deck of which had been trod by seven Presidents of this country possibly being shot back at American citizens.

The Mayflower was sold to Gielow sometime ago by the Navy after it was decided her days of usefulness had passed.

The Japanese first bid $12 a ton for the vessel, later raising the figure to $15.

Gielow has been negotiating with several parties in Washington with the idea of dismantling the craft and converting her main deck into a dancing floor.

Two Are Indicted In Patronage Case

Secretary and Brother of Rep. O'Malley Accused.

Milwaukee, Wis., May 8 (AP).—A Federal grand jury today indicted John O'Malley, son of Lieut. Gov. Thomas J. O'Malley and younger brother of Representative Thomas O'Malley, on charges of soliciting and receiving money in consideration of promises to use influence in obtaining Federal jobs.

Indicted with young O'Malley was Edward Curry, who was identified as the Congressman's secretary.

Federal authorities said the indictments were based on testimony by five former prohibition agents that O'Malley and Curry solicited money from them on promises to help them obtain posts in the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol.

Cleveland Girl Weds Italian Count Today

Rome, May 8 (AP).—Cardinal Fumasoni-Biondi, former Apostolic delegate to Washington, will celebrate the marriage tomorrow of Miss Jane Grasselli, Cleveland, Ohio, and Count Piero Duzzi Gradinego, Italian consul in Cleveland.

Miss Jane Sheverick, of Cleveland, will be maid of honor, and Prince Frederick Borromeo best man.

Reno Promoters Lose Point in Race Swindle

New York, May 8 (AP).—Federal Judge Grover M. Moscowitz today denied a defense demurrer to the indictment of William J. Graham and James C. McKay, and the trial of the two wealthy Reno, Nev., promoters, on charges of using the mails to defraud appeared definitely set for May 31.

The indictment centers on the swindling of John J. Callahan and his wife out of $140,000 three years ago through fake race track betting.

French Officer Whipped In Frontier Spy Scandal

Belfort, France, May 8 (AP).—The spy scandal over the loss of defense plans of this frontier city led today to the whipping of an officer of the garrison by a colleague.

The wielder of the riding crop was Maj. Jean Froge, brother of Capt. Georges Froge, accused by Stanislas Krauss, confessed spy, of selling the plans. Maj. Froge upbraided one of the witnesses, Capt. Deranque, and then laid the crop vigorously across his back until police interfered.

Weirton Due To Keep Work Paid by PWA

Ickes Will Not Oppose Contract of Alleged NRA Violator.

Although the Government is prosecuting the Weirton Steel Co. on a charge of violating recovery act provisions, Secretary of Interior Ickes said yesterday the Public Works Administration would make no effort to prevent the company from receiving a $35,000 contract to be paid for by the Government.

The contract for rail fastenings was awarded the steel company by the New York Central Railroad with the understanding that it was to be paid for from a PWA loan for improvements.

Hearings in the case against the Weirton Co. started several days ago. The Government charges the company refused to permit employes to select representatives for collective bargaining.

PWA contracts require purchases to be made only from firms complying with the recovery act and it was called to Ickes' attention that the company's right to a Blue Eagle has been challenged by NRA.

"Apparently we can't do anything about the Weirton contract," Ickes said. "They still are under the Blue Eagle. It looks as though it is up to the NRA now. As far as we are concerned, I guess we'll have to let the matter drop."

25 to 75 Silver Ratio Weighed By President

Nationalizing of Metal Is Considered at Conference.

as a metallic reserve for the United States.

"More specifically, the possibility of nationalizing silver in the same manner in which gold has already been nationalized through the purchase of existing free stocks at a limited price was explored.

"The meeting also explored the ultimate objective or National policy of having 25 per cent of the monetary value of the metallic reserve of the country in the form of silver."

Political Warning.

Until the texa of the bill emerges it is impossible to be precise. Mr. Roosevelt's stand for permissive powers against mandatory legislation caused the only meated debate during the White House session. Thomas allegedly said many Democratic Congressmen might be defeated this fall unless something important was assured for silver now.

"Oh, I hardly believe it is that serious," the United Press quoted Roosevelt as replying, with his usual smile.

Senator Borah, the sole Republican present, interposed that in any case unless something is done for silver "there's no use to try anything else at this session." This allusion to filibustering tactics, drew a sharp glance but no comment from Mr. Roosevelt.

Roosevelt's Stand.

That Mr. Roosevelt insists upon permissive powers over silver, as he did over "greenbacks" in the previous Thomas amendment to the farm bill, was further indicated by Senator Robinson of Arkansas, Democratic leader of the Senate. After calling on the President late in the day, Robinson said:

"My understanding is that a draft of a bill is being made with the prospect of legislation at this session. It is expected that in the main its principle features will be discretionary or permissive."

The bill would provide for purchase by the Treasury, at not more than 50 cents an ounce or by condemnation procedure if necessary, of all domestic free stocks of silver. he Treasury estimates the total at about 250,000,000 ounces. The silverites estimate that of this about one-half is needed for industrial and other uses, so that not more than 125,000,000 ounces would be left for purchase. At 50 cents an ounce, this would cost the Treasury $62,500,000.

Foreign Purchases.

In addition, the Treasury is buying newly-mined domestic silver at a price to net the miners 64½ cents an ounce. The current market price of silver is around 44 cents. Hence holders of free stocks would get a 6-cent premium per ounce if the 50-cent price plan goes through.

Mr. Roosevelt also appears willing to have optional authority to buy world stocks of silver toward the proposed 75-25 gold and silver monetary reserve. He is unwilling to have this purchase made mandatory. He told the Senators yesterday that it would be impossible to carry out if foreign holders cornered silver and put an excessive price upon it.

Here again estimates vary as to how much silver the Treasury would have to acquire to reach a 75-25 ratio. The silverites figure that it would necessitate buying all the way from 1,500,000,000 to as high as 5,000,000,000 ounces, depending upon how the dollar value of reserve silver is figured.

Would Bring Inflation.

Any such wholesale silver buying program would precipitate the sort of inflation against which Mr. Roosevelt has set himself to date. It would vastly complicate exchange problems and the prospect of restoring the "modernized gold standard" to whcih he has previously aspired.

Yesterday's session at the White House began shortly after 11 a. m. and adjourned at 12:30. Besides the President, those present were Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Herman Oliphant, of Treasury counsel, and Senators Thomas, Borah, Pittman, McCarran, King, Adams and Smith.

Thomas heralded the result of the conference as a "great step ahead." He predicted the result would be a boost in commodity prices. His interest in silver is primarily inflationary.

Attitudes Differ.

Adams said there had been a "close approach" to agreement, and thought the Government would buy up to 50,000,000 ounces of silcer a month.

Borah remarked that he would believe in an agreement when he saw it in writing and added, "We haven't settled anything definitely."

King is to lead some of the silverites to the Treasury today for the bill-drafting talk with Morgenthau and Aliphant.

Thomas argued for mandatory legislation throughout. The others appear willing to leave it to executive discretion.

Mr. Roosevelt succeeded in inducing Thomas to drop his pending mandatory amendment. He persuaded the entire group to discard the Deis bill on the ground that it would invite retaliation.

New Bill Awaited.

The vital question now is the text of the bill to be drafted in collaboration with the Treasury.

Prof. George F. Warren, exponent of the gold-buying ventures, has advocated symetallism—a combined gold and silver reserve.

The fact that Mr. Roosevelt has before with a combined reserve and is "exploring" it again, led to inferences yesterday that he still is heading toward some sort of commodity dollar goal.

This, apparently, would only flow from international action. Several Senators who were at the White House yesterday said this subject was mentioned generally. One of two inferred that Mr. Roosevelt has in mind an early international monetary conference.

ALICE MOCKS THE MOCK TURTLE

"We've had a lot of arithmetic," said the Mock Turtle. "But we can't figure out how anyone can go to Europe this year."

"Why, that's simple," said Alice. "You just send your baggage down to the pier and go aboard a steamship."

"But, Exchange Rates," shouted the other two in chorus.

Alice looked blank. "So what?" she said. "Just what have exchange rates to do with a round-trip steamship passage from New York?"

Any way you figure it, steamship passage is the biggest item in a European tour. Yet a room with bath, First Class, in the Aquitania now costs 37% less than in 1926, President Roosevelt's "Year of Normalcy"... and the average minimum First Class rate is down by 20%. Cabin Class rates are as low as $234 Round Trip; Tourist Class $188. Furthermore, the Cunard Deferred Payment Plan requires a down payment of only 25%.

And in Europe, railroad rates are reduced 20% to 50%, and hotel rates by an average of 36%. Exchange rates would have to climb very high indeed to offset these advantages. Ask your local agent or write us for folder proving European travel cheaper in 1934 than in 1926.

Small increases were adopted in three magisterial districts and none in two others.

G. O. P. Candidates Barred on Ballot

Ruling Given on Primary in Newport News.

Richmond, May 8 (AP).—Attorney General A. P. Staples today held that Newport News Republicans did not comply with election laws in a recent city primary preceding a city council election, and therefore the names of the candidates successful in the voting should not appear on the election ballot.

"It appears, however, that the alleged primary for the nomination of the Republican candidates in the Newport News election to be held June 12, 1934, instead of being held on the first Tuesday in April, was held May 3, 1934; that the judges who conducted said election were not appointed in the manner prescribed by the statutes * * * and that the houses of voting were in violation of the * * * provisions of Section 152 of the code," the opinion said.

"For these reasons it is the opinion of this office that the electoral board should not print on the ballots for the said election to be held on June 12, 1934, the names of W. T. Hopkins and C. M. Sifford."

In view of the fact that the expected arrival of the United States fleet is a month away, this action is connected with persistent reports that the stay of the Navy's fighting force in the Atlantic may be of short duration, because of increased tension in the Far East.

Officially, however, navy yard authorities state that this action is not unusual.

Woman Claimant Of Marshall Home To See Roosevelt

Richmond, May 8 (Spl.).—From California a claimant to the Chief Justice John Marshall estate has bobbed up.

She says her father never was a party to the sale of the property.

Mrs. Baker asserted her claim in a letter addressed to the Richmond Chamber of Commerce. She says she is the daughter of Samuel W. Marshall, next to the youngest son of John Marshall, and that her father moved to Iowa in 1860, and that she was born there in 1863.

Petition to Lift Tool Taxes Postponed

Carroll County Move Hit by Farmers.

Westminster, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—Plans laid by Carroll County business men early in April to petition the county commissioners for revocation of the tax on tools and machinery have been abandoned temporarily, it was learned today.

Factory heads sought to have the tax, which has been in effect a year, rescinded on the grounds that under NRA codes the advantages of a lower production cost here no longer exist, and that with tools and machinery tax-exempt elsewhere in the State, they were operating at a disadvantage.

It is understood that no further action will be taken on the matter this year because a number of farmers have voiced disapproval.

The appropriate patterns in slip covers for particular chairs—the harmony of slip covers to rugs—the relationship of draperies and curtains to the Period of the room—all play a vital part in the redecorating and brightening up of the home for Summer. Slip covers, formerly used for protection alone, now are used as a decoration, too. A demonstration of changing a Winter room of the Colonial Period into a Summer setting will be given.

G. O. P. Begins Fight on Farm Act Changes

Charges of Regimentation Are Hurled Against Amendments.

Charges of "regimentation" and "railroading" were hurled right and left yesterday by Republican Senators as they began a concerted movement to block passage of amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), Kansas, opened the fight before the Senate Agriculture Committee, and the opposition was resumed on the floor by Senators Arthur H. Vandenburg (Republican), Michigan, and L. J. Dickinson (Republican), Iowa.

One Democratic Senator, Homer T. Bone, Washington, asked several unfriendly questions of Agriculture Department proponents of the amendments at the committee hearing.

The proposals were warmly defended before the committee by Secretary Wallace. After denying accusations that the proposed changes would grant the department "appalling" power, he made some charges on his own account.

Organized Enemy Claimed.

Wallace reported a group of large distributors, professors and handlers of farm products mapped "an organized movement" against the amendments at a meeting in Chicago last week.

Dickinson challenged the Administration to "admit the experiment is not a success" and to abandon it. He predicted that "increasing regimentation" of agriculture would cause widespread reaction throughout the country.

He protested the grip of Government was becoming more "dictatorial." In support of his argument he charged a penal section was "slipped into" the recently passed sugar bill and would make possible fines and jail sentences for minor misstatements concerning processing taxes.

A butcher who exaggerated the effect of the processing tax, Dickinson reported, could be imprisoned six months for raising the price of a pork chop.

"I don't believe the Senate had any conception of what it was doing," he added.

Tax Receipts Held Low.

The Iowan insisted receipts from processing taxes were far below the sums spent by the Government in sending benefit payments to farmers.

"The rule," he explained, "is apparently never to try to balance your budget by seeing how much you owe—just balance it by how much you have spent."

He said 75 per cent of processing taxes were paid by farmers and 25 per cent by consumers. At any rate, he went on, the processing taxes failed to accomplish their purpose. He cited hog prices near the all-time low despite such a levy, and said cattle had been selling at their best level for three years without a processing tax.

"It is just leading from one program to another," Dickinson said, "so that nobody will know where it will end."

List of Products Reviewed.

Dickinson reviewed the list of products Wallace asked added to the basic commodities. He paused when he came to nuts and remarked:

"I think we ought to have an explanatory note there of the kind of nuts to be included."

Sophie Tells King He Will Miss Her

"You're gonna miss me, honey-y
"Some of these day-y-y-s-s-s,
"You're gonna feel so-o-o funny-y-y——"

It was a riot as she swished off into the wings, and returned a second later to give an encore, "Louisville Lou."

The king, Queen Mary and Princess Alice were seated in the royal box at the Palladium and waited through the entire performance for Sophie to appear at the end.

A packed house for a moment forgot the presence of their majesties, before whom decorum customarily is maintained, and after Sophie had sung the old favorites the cash customers roared, shouted and whistled their tremendous approval.

"More! More!" they shouted, stamping and whistling.

In the royal box, the king smiled broadly and all three members of the ruling family joined in the applause.

Another surprise appearance brought down the house again when the four Mills brothers, radio singers, sang "Lazy Bones" with their own unique accompaniment.

Post's Picture Used as Clew To Lost Youth

Mother in Texas Asks Aid of Secretary Ickes in Search.

It was a gala occasion, and photographers' cameras caught the Secretary, pay envelopes in his hand, with workers filing by. Besides the stocky Public Works Administrator, The Washington Post photographer caught on his plate a tousled-haired lad, shirt open at throat, the strings of a tobacco sack dangling from an upper pocket.

Picture Reaches Texas.

The picture was printed in The Washington Post, September 10. Others like it went through the Nation, depicting the Administrator of Public Works on the scene of one of his projects. No one paid much heed to the lad standing next to him, waiting for his pay.

That is, not until the picture reached Texas. There it caught the eye of a mother. For in it Mrs. Nettles saw her missing son, who had left home early in September. She wrote Secretary Ickes.

"I am inclosing the picture," she wrote, "and have an 'X' marked on his shirt front. If you can tell me anything about him I would greatly appreciate it, as I am terribly anxious to learn of his whereabouts." With her letter was a folded newspaper clipping of the picture, identical with the one printed in The Washington Post.

Inquiry here failed to develop trace of the boy. According to Capt. Whitehurst, director of highways in the District, he registered under the name of "Taylor," giving his address as Washington.

Yesterday, an answer to Mrs. Nettles was on its way from the office of Secretary Ickes.

Hunt Is Speeded

"In reply to your letter," the Secretary wrote, "you may be assured that I shall do everything possible to help you locate the whereabouts of your son, Altus Nettles. The delay in answering your letter sooner was occasioned by my hope that the United States Employment Service or the District of Columbia government would be able to give the Public Works Administration the information you so much desire.

"Capt. Whitehurst, director of highways, District of Columbia, advised the Public Works Administration that 'from the best information the man in the picture went under another name and gave a Washington address.'

"I am making public today this letter to you trusting that your son may learn about your anxiety and communicate with you. Sincerely yours, Harold L. Ickes."

To facilitate the search, Public Works Administration officials appealed to The Post yesterday for the original picture printed in September. It will be turned over to them and copies sent to newspapers all over the country in hope that it will result in reunion of a mother and her son.

Grand Jurors Clear Mellon In Tax Evasion

Federal Charges Ignored on Alleged Shortage of $716,144.

seriously mislead by Mr. Mellon's statements, which were evidently timed so as to be current while the grand jury had his case under consideration. There is no reason, however, to believe that these highly improper asertions affected the result.

"The simple truth is that he was treated like anyone else in a similar situation."

The crux of the Government's charge was based on its claim that the former Ambassador to the Court of St. James listed losses on two stock sales on which, it was charged, he was not entitled to deductions.

The first was the sale of stock of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., in which a capital loss of $5,672,189.95 and an ordinary loss of $5,766.30 were listed.

The second was on a sale of stock o fthe Western Public Service Co., in which there was a claim of a capital loss of $352,500 and an ordinary loss of $49,500.

Treasury officials in Washington, taking indirect cognizance of a statement by Mellon last Friday in which he maintained he actually has "overpaid" his income taxes, said the next step in the case is for him to petition the Board of Tax Appeals for a refund.

Mellon has said he will do so.

In the statement Friday the banker also charged the Government was "railroading" him to the grand jury in an attempt to discredit former Administrations in which he participated.

Jockey Balaski Rides To 3 Victories at Downs

Louisville, Ky., May 8 (AP).—Racing today, minus any outstanding feature, was overshadowed by the riding of the apprentice, L. Balaski, when he drove home with the Calumet Farm's Hug Again in the Henry Clay Hotel Claiming Purse, his third victory of the day.

Seven competed in the Henry Clay, a dash of 6 furlongs, with Hug Again a lukewarm favorite at 12 to 5. Balaski took the Stimulus filly to the front with a rush, and although she was hard pressed at the finish by M. Bolblatt's Gilbert Elston, the favorite players were given little cause for concern.

Gilbert Elston, in the second flight during the early running, closed courageously to outdistance Southland Duke for the show. The big disappointment of the race was Bubuska, which tailed off to nothing after showing early speed.

Hug Again covered the 6 furlongs in 1:12 4-5 to pay $6.80 for a $2 investment. It was her second score of the meeting.

Refused to Indict Former Secretary

Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury for 12 years and former Ambassador to England, after deliberating in Pittsburgh for only five hours. Parley Fails To End Strike Of Carpenters Workers Gain Support of Central Labor Union in Demands.

Bolstered by support of the Central Labor Union, union carpenters yesterday held firm to their demands for $1.37½ an hour and a six-hour day at a protracted conference with contractors which ended in failure.

The meeting, arranged by Howard T. Colvin, commissioner of conciliation, was held in the Labor Department Building. After two hours of argument it broke up, continuing a deadlock which is keeping an estimated 1,500 carpenters out of work and hindering practically all construction in the Capital.

Among the union's representatives were O. C. Rickard, president of the District council, and William Allen, sent here from Indianapolis to represent the international organization in the controversy. The builders' arguments were presented by C. Wohlgemuth and Frank J. Sheehan, president and secretary, respectively, of the Moster Builders Association, and four member contractors.

Yesterday's conference was the first between carpenters and builders since the strike was called May 1. Another probably will be scheduled this week by Colvin in an effort to prevent a complete tieup on all Federal and private construction here.

In a statement issued before the meeting yesterday, the carpenters' council said the present $1-an-hour scale is too low compared to rates paid other building trades mechanics and that adoption of the six-hour day would give employment to one-third more men.

"The council has no concessions to make nor any intention of advising those whom it represents to recede from the stand they have taken," concluded the statement released by A. J. S. Dixon, jr., secretary.

Indorsement of the strike and the carpenters' demands was announced yesterday by Frank J. Coleman, executive secretary of the Central Labor Union. The group's action was based primarily on the union's previously expressed contention that the $1-an-hour contract with the Master Builders Association, which expired April 30, was invalid, Coleman said.

Local contractors, represented by the Master Builders Association, have offered the carpenters $1.10 an hour for a 90-day period pending an adjustment by the National Recovery Administration.

U. S. Fight for $2,000,000 Mellon Tax Shifts to Capital

Government's Claim Goes to Tax Appeals Board After Pittsburgh Grand Jury Dismisses Criminal Action.

By Raymond Clapper.

The tax case of Andrew W. Mellon will be shifted to Washington where the Board of Tax Appeals soon will weigh the Government's claim for almost $2,000,000 in back taxes and penalties charged against the former Cabinet officer.

Officials were somewhat taken aback by the abrupt dismissal of the criminal case against Mr. Mellon by a Pittsburgh grand jury yesterday.

Attorney General Cummings stated that Mr. Mellon has issued "highly improper" statements and apparently had timed them with the meeting of the grand jury. He hastened to add, however, that he did not think these statements influenced the result.

Suggestions that Mr. Mellon had been a victim of political persecution apparently caused General Cummings to state that he "was treated like anyone else in a similar situation."

General Cummings said there would be no further criminal proceedings against Mr. Mellon in connection with the tax case.

Policy to Be Continued.

However, it appears as if this case may be destined to become one of the most celebrated of this Administration. The wealthy figure who was conspicuous in the three previous Administrations has asserted that politics was at the bottom of the case against him and that he had warning long ago that the Administration was out to "get" him. This charge and equally emphatic denials, may be expected to be thrown back and forth throughout the political months just ahead.

The first instance of this appeared within a few hours when Senator Thomas D. Schall (Republican), Minnesota, chose the Mellon case as the subject of his almost daily political statement. He said the case would prove a boomerang to the Administration.

"This case had been tried in the newspapers which, of itself, would prejudice an unthinking jury, but despite this and all the grapevine methods of the Government to railroad those hostile to their dictatorship, the grand jury refused to be fooled into an indictment," Schall said. "This case should be almost as big a boomerang as the unconstitutional cancellation of air-mail contracts and is the beginning of the end of the attempt to Sovietize the United States."

Several wealthy taxpayers received good news from the Bureau of Internal Revenue yesterday. The Treasury granted a tax credit of $52,001 to the Koppers Co., a Mellon concern. The estate of the late Thomas F. Ryan, copper king, was granted an abatement of $23,639,399 and the estate of the late Elbert H. Gary, former head of U. S. Steel, received an abatement of $1,841,452. Both estates were adjudged to have been overassessed.

Meantime, officials indicated they would continue the policy of carrying into court tax cases where they believe evasion or fraud is indicated. Treasury officials said they would continue to refer to the Department of Justice all cases of this kind.

When President Roosevelt announced some weeks ago that the Government would carry such cases before grand juries, it was explained that the purpose was to avoid any appearance either of singling out wealthy men for prosecution or of being unwilling to go after them when it felt it had a case.

The fairest method, it was felt, was to take the evidence before a grand jury and let it say whether there seemed to be grounds for criminal prosecution. Where no such grounds were found, it was added, the Government would then proceed with civil action to recover the taxes it felt were due.

Officials pointed out last night that in Mr. Mellon's case the effort to collect the alleged back taxes already had gone to the Board of Tax Appeals and that as a matter of automatic procedure the case would be followed through.

Refund to Be Claimed.

Mr. Mellon last week said he not only would challenge any attempt to collect these taxes, but would claim a refund on what he holds to have been overpayments.

The original announcement that the Mellon case would be presented to a grand jury was made March 10. At the same time it was stated similar action would be taken against former Mayor James J. Walker of New York, who is in Europe; Thomas S. Lamont, a member of J. P. Morgan & Co., and Thomas L. Sidlo, a law partner of Newton D. Baker, of Cleveland.

Whether to avoid the appearance of any political motive or not, it was noted at the time that two of the group were Republicans and the other two were Democrats. The Sidlo case, in the meantime, has been settled by negotiation, and no further action is contemplated. Neither the Walker nor the Lamont cases have been presented to grand juries.

These cases are all part of a drive to collect some $300,000,000 in back taxes decided upon shortly after Henry Morgenthau became Secretary of the Treasury. He estimated that delinquent taxes total $800,000,000, but he counted upon collecting probably 40 per cent of them.

Two Amendments to Stocks Measure Spurned by Senate

a special committee of the National Association of Manuafcturers, headed by W. B. Bell, president of the American Cyonamid Co., contending the bill would subject 450,000 corporations to a "strangling regulation." Steiwer said the con'entions of this group were "essentially true in substance."

Fletcher Makes Statement.

Later in the day, however, Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher of the Banking and Currency Committee, issued a statement to the press taking sharp exception to both the association's statement and Steiwer's contention.

He said the assertion that the bill subjected 450,000 corporations to "strangling regulation" through a Federal commission was "simply a terroristic exaggeration to frighten little business into pulling out of the fire the chestnuts of big business and the New York Stock Exchange."

Fletcher said he wished to point out "the irony of the lion-and-the-lamb attitude" which the signers of the letter "have protectively assumed over "450,000 small corporations.

Nearly half of the 28 corporation executives who signed the letter, he said, represent corporations which "control over one-half of the corporate wealth of the country and which almost without exception are completely dominated by a handful of great investment bankers in Wall street." He cited them as companies under Morgan, Mellon, Kuhn-Loeb, Lehman and Goldman-Sachs domination.

Motives Are Questioned.

The only interest the signers of the letter, he continued, "have ever had in small business is to swallow it up in their plans for complete concentration."

Fletcher contended the "real regimenters of business in this country are not laws but the far-flung plans of banking interests which float securities through the exchanges to build up huge combinations to man their interlocking boards of directors with the bankers' own appointees, swallow up every independent business worthy of the name, run every city in the country from their headquarters in New York and permit survival of the 450,000 corporations mentioned only at their temporary sufferance and on their terms."

Fletcher analyzed the sections in question in some detail to show that they did not constitute any threat to any corporation, except requiring it to make truthful statements of its financial condition, and required "no more than the absolute minimum essential for the enlightenment and protection of investors."

Air Mail Flies On Time Again By Private Line

P. O. Officials Sign More Contracts Today With Other Concerns.

ing three legal principles, struck back yesterday at private carriers which sought aid of the courts to enforce restoration of their canceled air-mail contracts.

Assistant United States Attorneys David A. Pine and John W. Fihelly, in motions filed in the District Supreme Court, asked that suits filed by the Pacific Air Transport, National Air Transport, Boeing Air Transport and the Varney Air Lines, to compel Postmaster General Farley to rescind his cancellation order, be dismissed.

The air lines sued Farley as an individual in an attempt to get around the ban on suits against the Government, which can not be maintained without the Government's consent.

In demanding that the companies be denied redress in the courts, the Government contended that Farley, while he was addressed as a private citizen in the carriers' actions, was in fact and is Postmaster General, and as such can not be sued without his consent.

The Government also contended cancellation of the contracts was a matter of discretion with Farley, and that the courts will not substitute their descretion for that of a Government official except when his action has been "arbitrary or capricious."

Remedy Pointed Out.

The third ground for asking dismissal was that there exists a "plain, adequate and complete" remedy for the aggrieved carriers through suits in the United States Court of Claims.

No attempt was made in the motions to meet the issues raised in the suits, which were drawn by Col. William J. Donovan, former Assistant Attorney General. According to rules of the Supreme Court, the complainants now have five days within which to file answers to the Government's motions and prepare for oral arguments before a motions court justice.

Favored by fair weather most of the way, the first of the private carriers to resume flying the air mail got its multimotored ships, with more than a score of passengers, through to destinations exactly on scedule time. No attempt was made to better existing records—the Army Air Corps having had a final fling in that direction by carrying mail from Oakland, Calif., to Newark yesterday in 14 hours 8 minutes, using a relay of ships. The Army claimed this as a record, although Transcontinental and Western Air sent a single plane through in 13 hours 5 minutes just before its contract expired last February.

United Airlines ships left Newark at 1:15 and 11:30 a. m. and 9:15 p. m., with two departures out of Chicago for the Far West, in addition to the Salt Lake City, Seattle, San Diego flights.

Increase Predicted.

"Indications are that air-mail poundage out of cities on the route and tributary to it will show substantial increase with restoration of our 19½-hour multimotored passenger service from coast to coast," Harold Crary, of United Airlines, said last night.

At the same time, the company announced it will stop operation of its multimotored passenger-express planes between Kansas City and Dallas as a result of United's failure to obtain the temporary air-mail award for that route. It explained its bid was based on operation of multimotored equipment flown with two pilots and carrying two radios, and the company could not compete with bids on the basis of a price for single-engined equipment. United will maintain flying service to 40 cities in 18 States, Crary said.

New routes to be added to those over which commercial carriers will fly the mail next week lie between Newark and Los Angeles, Newark and Miami, Newark and New Orleans and Chicago and Jacksonville, Fla.

The Department of Commerce yesterday issued figures indicating the decline in passenger service on the Nation's air routes following cancellation of the mail contracts. During March, 22,045 passengers were carried by scheduled air lines, compared with 27,318 during February. The March mileage was 2,372,666, compared with February's 2,987,822.

O'Connell Suspects Caught in Havana

Kidnap Fugitives Will Be Returned to Albany.

Albany, N. Y., May 8 (AP).—District Attorney Jonh T. Delaney tonight said he had word from Washington that Francis Oley and Percy Geary, wanted in connection with the kidnaping of Lieut John J. O'Connell last summer, has been arrested by Federal agents in Havana.

Delaney said he plannned to take steps immediately to bring the two men back to Albany to face trial. They are already under indictment with John Oley, who is still at large. Maney Strewl, first to face trial, is now serving 50 years in Dannemora.

Young O'Connell, nephew of the powerful Albany Democratic leaders, Dan and Ed O'Connell, was snatched last July and held captive a month. A ransome of $40,00 was paid for his release.

Textbook Code Hit by Johnson; Will Refuse It

Proposal to Raise Prices Brings Hot Protest in Congress.

A barrage of criticism from members of Congress drew assurances from Gen. Hugh S. Johnson that he considered the proposed code for the textbook publishing industry "absurd" and would refuse to approve it.

Gen. Johnson's position was revealed by Representative Jed Johnson (Democrat), Oklahoma, author of a resolution calling for an investigation into reports the code would bring substantial increases in the price of school books.

At the same time, a House Education sub-committee approved legislation to permit grade and high schools in financial difficulties to draw upon a $75,000,000 Federal fund and keep open next year.

The fund would be administered by the Emergency Relief Administration, with the advice of the Federal Office of Education. Private nontuiton schools would be eligible to apply for aid. The fund would be limited to institutions above high school rating.

Douglas Pleased.

Representative Douglas (Democrat), Massachusetts, said the full committee would act on the measure soon. Commenting on the bill, Douglas said: "I think that this is the best present solution of the crisis in education, and we are hopeful it will have the approval of the White House."

Representative Johnson declared he would refrain from pressing his textbook resolution due to the recovery administrator's assurances.

"As drawn," Representative Johnson charged, "the code would cost American taxpayers at least $10,000,000 a year. Some greedy textbook publishers thought they could get the Federal Governmetn to back them up in their efforts to get around State laws, requiring competitive bidding.

Parents Lack Cash.

"I have no objection to a code applying to wages and hours, but I know many parents are having enough trouble keeping their children in school already and can't afford to pay any more for books. Some of the subordinates at the NRA favored the code and were about to get by with it until we got in touch with Gen. Johnson."

The National Catholic Welfare Council was among organizations which opposed the tentative code.

Opponents protested the code would establish an authority of 11 members, all to be selected by the textbook industry. Such a board, it was charged, would have authority to dominate selection, adoption and price of books.

Complaint also was voiced against a provision for appointment of a public relations board. Those interested contended publishers or persons friendly to them would comprise the membership.

An attack also was made against proposals to force payments of bills within 30 days. It was said such a clause would oblige States and other purchasing units to borrow money, in order to settle their accounts on time.

Foes of the code said the publishing business as a whole was on a sound basis and did not need to raise prices.

Schools' Bill Not Paid, Water Ordered Cut Off

Ogden, Utah, May 7. (AP).—Employes of the city waterworks department were ordered today to visit the city's 14 schools tomorrow and shut off the water.

The city commission reached the decision on the insistence of Mayor Harman W. Perry and in the face of arguments by M. Spencer Stone, president of the city school board, that an agreement provided that the schools should receive free water. Mayor Peery demanded payment of nearly $6,000 for water already furnished.

3 Young Bank Robbers Sentenced in Arkansas

Dr. Welch Leaves Fund, Books And Papers to Johns Hopkins

Quarter of Estate Will Go to Endow Library of History Section.

Baltimore, May 8 (Spl.).—An endowment fund for the Johns Hopkins University, preferably for the benefit of the institute of the history of medicine or the Welch Memorial Medical Library, is created in the will of the late Dr. William H. Welch, noted pathologist, filed for probate in the orphans court here today.

Dr. Welch also left his medical and scientific library, papers, pamphlets, diplomas, medals and medical portraits to the university. These are to be distributed among the school of medicine, the school of hygiene and public health, the Medical History Institute, and the medical library.

The will, drawn March 31, 1933, was witnessed by Charles McHenry Howard and Joseph L. Kerr. It was drawn up while Dr. Welch was a patient at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, which he helped to found nearly 50 years ago. He died April 30, at the age of 84.

In addition to his bequests to the university, Dr. Welch left $100 each to five namesakes, and an equal sum to each of five employes of the Johns Hopkins Hospital who had been associated with him.

The sum for the university is one-quarter of the entire estate, but no estimate of the value is possible until the executors file their petition for letters testamentary. Another fourth of the estate goes to Senator Frederic C. Walcott, of Connecticut, a nephew of Dr. Welch, and quarter portions are left to two nieces.

A Question Of Justice.

Attorney General Cummings announced on March 10 that he would seek indictment of Andrew W. Mellon upon the ground that he had underpaid his income tax for 1931. Mr. Mellon has claimed, and it has not been denied, that he was given no opportunity to defend the correctness of his return before Treasury officials. Instead, the evidence against him was presented to a jury of his fellow citizens in Alleghany County.

An indictment was naturally expected, because an indictment is nothing more nor less than a certificate that sufficient evidence is available to warrant trial by a jury. Nobody presumed that the Attorney General of the United States would direct presentation to an inquisitorial body of evidence so flimsy as to be completely rejected.

By no stretch of the imagination could the refusal to indict be attributed to Mr. Mellon's personal popularity. According to the Associated Press, the jury was composed of steelworkers, laborers, carpenters and clerks, among others. It may be presumed, also, that among the jurors were persons whose interests were involved in the closing of a bank, which has been said by some to have failed because of Mr. Mellon's refusal to rescue it.

While the game of discrediting prominent officials of previous Administrations is nothing new in American politics, it must be said that there is no precedent in recent generations at least which compares with the present instance. As the matter now stands the Attorney General, with great publicity, has brought the most serious kind of charges against one of the highest Cabinet officers of a previous Administration. Before a jury selected in the usual way these charges are dismissed as having no prima facie merit. The seriousness of this procedure is that it will raise in the minds of justice-loving Americans of both parties in all sections a question concerning the way that justice is being administered by the present Administration.

Removing The Second Dam.

One of the arguments being used against the imperativeness of modifying the securities act is that it would be at best some months before such changes could result in an appreciable increase in the volume of security issues. It is concluded, therefore, that while facilitation of the issue of private securities would be a stimulant to business in the long run, no immediate effect can be anticipated. This point of view overlooks a cardinal element of capital markets, for although it might be two months or more after the act is modified before any securities could be offered for sale, there is much that can happen in the meantime.

In appraising the probability of such immediate developments the first point to bear in mind is the unusually large volume of funds that is available for investment at present. Definite figures can not be given, but the aggregate unquestionably amounts to billions of dollars. Never in history has the pressure for investment been as great as it is today.

This pressure has been ineffective, however, because investors have had doubts as to the policy of the Administration. These doubts have concerned, on one hand, the monetary and fiscal policy of the Government, and on the other hand, the attitude of the Administration toward private initiative and profits. Whether the investing class has been correct in holding such doubts is, for the present purpose, unimportant. The fact remains that it has been inclined to wait for a satisfactory answer.

On the whole a satisfactory answer has been given on the monetary and fiscal policy. Rightly or wrongly, investors in an ever increasing number are convinced that there is to be no more experiments along the line of the Warren theory, that the dollar is to be held at its present gold content, and that the Federal budget will be balanced in 1936. These matters, accordingly, no longer are acting as a deterrent to investment.

There still remains, nevertheless, the question as to the attitude of the Administration toward private investments and private profits. It is this issue that largely is involved in modifications of the security act. If the Administration supports, and drives through, amendments that indicate it is not only willing but anxious to have private investors reassume the burden of financing business, this question will be answered. Investors can then make commitments with some feeling of assurance that they will not be jeopardized by governmental policy.

Once investors do reach such a conclusion, and granting fresh doubts are not created in other directions, there will be an immediate move to invest funds in sound new issues as well as in existing securities. Then the great pressure of our surplus funds will begin to be effective. Investors not only will bid more vigorously for high grade securities, but will be willing to take the risks of true entrepreneurs. No longer will they fear that their investments may be, to some extent, legislated out of existence.

In a word, then, modification of the securities act will not be limited in its effects to the issuance of new securities some months hence. Rather, it will serve as an immediate and powerful stimulant to business through removing the second great dam to private investment that has existed in the minds of those already in possession of surplus funds.

Compulsory Codification.

A few days ago Gen. Johnson told members of the United States Chamber of Commerce that the recovery act could not be enforced with penalties and policemen. "Whether the principle involved was to be continued as a permanent thing," he added, "would depend upon what industry wanted and what the public thought it should have." After such an emphatic indorsement of the principle of industrial self-regulation, it comes as a surprise to hear that the NRA has drafted a complete code for the telegraph industry following unsuccessful efforts to induce the companies to formulate an acceptable agreement. Gen. Johnson now says he may have to impose this code upon the companies, although he has never failed to negotiate an agreement yet and does not expect to fail in this case.

Such a procedure would be highly objectionable for two reasons. In the first place, it would establish a precedent which would encourage the extension of compulsory codification to other industries. And if the Recovery Administration begins to employ its powers of coercion to discipline non-cooperating industries, the policemen and the penalties that Gen. Johnson brushes aside, will have to be used to make the imposed codes effective. Moreover, an attempt to force a code upon the telegraph companies would be open to especially strong criticism because it would enable the Recovery Administration to dictate and control the practices and policies of public utilities which are already subject to Federal and State regulatory laws.

The proposed code is not limited to provisions relating to wages and hours of employment. It would affect rates and rental polices and ban various practices which it declares to be unfair. It is not sound policy under any circumstances to extend the authority of the NRA to regulated public utilities, even if the intervention is limited to hour and wage agreements and is voluntarily accepted by the companies concerned. It is, however, much worse to set up an NRA regulatory authority empowered to impose additional restrictions by decree. Regulation, to be intelligent and reasonable, must be concentrated in the hands of one controlling authority, instead of being parceled out among rival administrative bodies.

If telegraph and other communications companies are to be more effectively controlled, the existing regulatory system should be strengthened. The proposal which the NRA now has under consideration seems particularly inopportune since Congress is considering legislation to centralize Federal control over wire communications in the hands of a single board which would take over authority vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Radio Commission.

If this initial attempt to impose a complete code upon an unwilling and already regulated industry is carried through, the NRA will be licensed to enter a field with which it has no business to meddle, even if its authority to do so is upheld by the courts.

To Expedite Criminal Cases.

American courts have been frequently criticized for their failure properly to expedite the trial of criminal cases. Delay has often frustrated justice in Federal as in State courts. Under a law approved last March, the Supreme Court has now laid down new rules designed to speed criminal cases through the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court, after prisoners have pleaded guilty or have been convicted in district courts.

Under the new rules sentences must be imposed without delay unless motions are pending for withdrawal of a guilty plea, arrest of judgment and a new trial, or the court holds there are reasonable grounds for such motions. The changes, which will become effective on September 1, are considered highly significant by those who have watched the slow procedure of the courts in criminal cases.

Legal procrastination will not be entirely eliminated, however, by the new rules. There are still chances for much delay in bringing criminal cases to trial. Establishment of these rules is a step in the right direction, but, as Mayor LaGuardia, himself a lawyer, recently said, there is far more room for legal reform in both State and Federal courts than lawyers, bar associations, or judges are willing to admit.

What Price Free Speech?

E. S. Daniell, jr., has discovered that free speech is one of those sacred political doctrines which sometimes suffer at the hands of some of their proponents. He is the young humorist lately convicted of flooding the New York Stock Exchange with tear gas, but he made this discovery by attempting to flood Union Square with oratory.

About every third time that there is a Communist meeting in Union Square the police interfere, and the Communists berate them for hampering freedom of speech. Perhaps it is natural, therefore, that the Communists should have come to regard the square as their own—whenever they can hold it—bought by their zealous protests and paid for with their wounds. At any rate, they resented invasion by this newcomer, for Mr. Daniell was proclaiming neither police discipline nor Communism, but his own "National Independent Party." He was taken to Bellevue Hospital for "stitches on the right side of his mouth."

In historic Union Square speech is free, with the police, if you keep silent. It is free, with the Communists, if you talk Communism. But, with both parties, you must be careful not to "talk out of the wrong side of your mouth."

Water On Both Shoulders.

Although the drastic quotas imposed upon Japanese exports to the British colonies are a measure of economic defense, this prospective trade war can not be entirely divorced from the larger problem of the Far East. Japan's intensive campaign to develop foreign trade is really a part of her imperialistic policy enunciated recently at both Geneva and Tokyo. Exports in large volume are essential to finance Japan's excursions into China and development of an army and navy strong enough to back up her policy of overlordship in eastern Asia.

If the contest between British and Japanese interests were merely a case of economic rivalry, there would be a tendency to deplore the erection of new trade barriers. But Japan is obviously indulging in unfair competition in the world market for the purpose of financing a policy that is repugnant to virtually every civilized nation. Manufacturers of the Nippon are forcing their goods into markets in every quarter of the globe by means of currency depreciation and extremely low wages. This appears to be the only method by which Japan can accumulate her military supplies, develop her industries and in general acquire a backlog of strength to support her ambitions.

Quite a number of countries have adopted restrictive measures against the "dumping" of Japanese goods. If textiles and possibly other Japanese exports are now to be rigidly curtailed in all the British colonies, competition will doubtless be intensified in other markets, notably Latin America. Other countries may be forced to protect their industries against Japanese encroachments, and to guard their exports through reciprocal agreements. This tendency may prove to be one of the most formidable obstacles to Japan's Far Eastern program.

There seems to be a fundamental inconsistency in the bold policy which the Tokyo government is following. On one hand, it is trying to assume overlordship of the Far East, and on the other, it is seeking to extend its own commerce throughout the world. Of course, Japan disclaims any intention of closing the open door to Chinese trade. Yet the protectorate over China, which the Tokyo government seems to contemplate, is a move to isolate the Far East. Japanese spokesmen have referred to this policy, very carelessly, as the Monroe Doctrine for Eastern Asia. Much talk is heard about "Asia for Asiatics." While thus trying to exclude Occidental interference in Asia, Japan is vigorously extending her commerce from India to South America.

Political sectionalism is thoroughly incompatible with commercial internationalism. Japan can not expect other countries to stand idly by and see their trade jeopardized by unfair competition that is intended to strengthen an imperialistic policy in the Far East. Restrictions against Japanese dumping may prove to be more effective than diplomatic notes in modifying this unreasonable program.

Debs And Slang.

Assiduous research by a Post reporter has revealed the fact that slang among the debutantes of Washington has become stagnant. Certainly if the few examples quoted are those in current use the stagnation is all too evident. Calling a campus sheik a "smoothie" hardly places one in the front ranks of modern slangsters. That is, if there is any new slang, which we very much doubt. As a matter of fact, there have been very few new words added to the American language since the repeal of prohibition. That error (era) brought forth a number of exciting expressions, ranging from "pineapple" to "scram," both of them mighty expressive words, especially the latter if said out of the left corner of the mouth.

The reporter, of course, went to the wrong source for information. Debutantes sooner or later get to know the popular slang, but they are usually two years late at least, in picking up the best expressions. Police courts, hobo jungles, theatrical hangouts, and the lamented speakeasies were good places to learn the newest phraseology, and now that the speakeasy has gone, the debutante has little chance of meeting up with the type accustomed to using the American language in the rough.

Many of our slang words came originally from abroad, and a good number still in use were of Australian origin. Most slang words, if traced to their lairs, came out of a rough and tumble existence wherein the common words failed to express the exigencies of an abnormal life. Baseball, the prize ring, Tin Pan Alley, newspaper offices, and other such strange places sent forth a stream of new words. The war, too, produced a few that got into common usage and survived the struggle. But life has been quiet lately, there have been few events worthy of producing new slang, and under the New Deal everything goes by initials instead of names. No wonder the language has gone stale. But it will perk up again and new phrases will appear. They will be years old, however, before they get around the debutantes, now that the speakeasies are closed up.

District Dues.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am quoting the first paragraph of your editorial of May 2: "Treaties can lawfully be modified or be terminated only by processes prescribed or recognized or agreed upon by the parties to them."

I should like the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to get up nerve enough to serve this forcible notice on Congress with a very slight change:

"Contracts can lawfully be modified or be terminated only by processes prescribed or recognized or agreed on by the parties to them."

I refer to the contract of 1878 (never legally terminated) between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, prescribing the part each is to contribute toward the expenses of the said District of Columbia.

Are there not members of the Senate and of the House who are fair-minded enough to introduce and back up a resolution granting the District of Columbia authority to sue the Federal Government for the many millions of dollars due the District, being the amount over and above the pitiful handout by Congress and the sum that should have been appropriated as the Federal Government's share of the expenses of the District under the contract of 1878?

We should have as much representation is Congress as the smallest State enjoys, to say the least. It is about time the District of Columbia received its fair portion instead of a measly handout to an unwanted stepchild. We have neither "Liberty nor Love."

A Parking Compromise.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has been said that the reason for all-night parking in Washington is that the people here are poorer than the inhabitants of other cities. If that be true, these unfortunates must be considered in a kindly way. But, speaking as one of the victims of these all-night parkers, I would like to suggest a compromise which might possibly be carried out.

I propose that each man or woman who buys an automobile to keep on the street, shall put it in front of his or her house. Surely a modest request. My own experience has been that these people almost invariably choose a position in front of a stranger's home, for reasons known only to themselves. Men have come from miles away and left their automobiles in front of my house for two or three days at a time, thus making me appear to break a law of which they are ignorant. Namely the law prohibiting the storage of an automobile for more than 18 hours on the same spot. Other sufferers would confirm me in this, if given the chance. This is a fair proposition that the portion of the street before each residence be reserved for its occupants, and I venture to offer it.

Vain Struggle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: People work and save and spend the best years of their youth to secure financial independence, and often when they have gained economic success they find they are unable to enjoy it; that they are not as happy as when they had less; that the years of struggle have taken their toll, and that the game was not worth the candle. Americans struggle for financial success and then find they can not relax or sleep well. Their bodies become worn-out machines and all that they have secured does not do them much good.

"Fidelis ad Finem."

To The Editor of The Post—Sir: Your publication a few days ago of the account of the General Grant memorial services called to mind a very beautiful poem to the General entitled "Fidelis ad Finem", which I read in 1900 in a popular magazine of that day, and which, as best I can recall, was published in connection with the dedication of the Grant Tomb on Riverside Drive, New York City, about 1897.

For many years I have been trying to locate this poem, but as I cannot recall the name of the magazine in which it was published, nor the author, I have not been able to find it. I wonder if any of your readers can assist me?

COLLECTOR.

For a New Political Party.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Senator William E. Borah has just delivered himself of a suggestion that the Republican party must be cleansed if it is to be saved to the future. The Senator had better join the Democratic party, if he seeks a part in the cleansing of either of the old parties. The Democratic party has at least started on the new course, which might be recognized as a rehabilitation, while the Republican party has taken a few steps backward that their leaders may get a better tug-of-war grip with which to overcome the Democrats.

The trouble about cleansing the Republican party is that nobody knows where to begin. The people generally are sniffing the breezes of reform and most certainly that is the point which the Republicans oppose, respecting the Democrats, and where can the Republicans project any manner of reform without aping the Democrats? The Republican cart is now in a deep bog, and it is apparent to anybody who is not standing up too close to the object.

Our old political traditions sustain us no longer. That is not any more true of the Republican than of the Democratic party. It is a fact concerning both and the public is rapidly forming a line of march with the purpose of getting into some organization entirely divorced from either of the old parties. I was reared a Democrat. Today I do not know what I am and am on the anxious seat. No office seeker on the Republican platform could change me to a Republican, because there is not enough difference in the policies for which they have fought for the past 40 years to satisfy a Democrat in changing to the Republican party.

Senator Borah might have better luck starting a new party than in cleaning the ears of the Republican party.

A Year-Round Clean-Up.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A clean-up week is excellent, as far as it goes, but what would we think of a housekeeper who cleans her house once a year and the rest of the time strewed the premises with trash and litter?

Will not The Post please inform the public what the local ordinances are against scattering waste matter on streets, sidewalks and in parks, and then voice a demand that these laws be enforced the year round? I have seen slovenly adults sit right beside a trash receptacle and drop waste and newspapers on the ground unreprimanded. After every holiday our beautiful parks are a disgusting spectacle of strewn litter and papers. This would not be tolerated in other countries.

As Others See It

The Vicious Armies

(Des Moines Register.)

Colored shirt wearing, as evidence of the wearer's political sympathies, has extended to the point of causing serious concern in non-Fascist European governments.

Attention has been called in England to the rapid increase in outbreaks of violence in which men uniformed by colored shirts have participated.

"When we reflect on some recent events abroad, I do not think that it is untimely or out of place to declare that we do not want any private organizations for keeping order in this country," said Sir John Simon in a recent address at Glasgow, Scotland. "There is nothing advanced or up to date in drilling a set of uniformed recruits to uphold by their physical efforts a particular doctrine or to defend a special cause."

Perhaps the nearest we have come to "uniformed private organizations for keeping order" in the United States during recent years was the brief but spectacular flourishing of the Ku-Klux Klan, a body which sought to arrogate to itself both police and judicial functions of government and to dictate both public and personal conduct. Kluxism, which contained elements of Fascism and Hitlerism, and which claimed for itself the only real simon-pure 100 per cent Americanism, wore the longest shirt of them all, but has disappeared from the American scene. Recalling its short ascendancy, however, we can discern the common sense in the British statesman's further words on the subject.

"There is special objection to this sort of thing—the existence of one private and unauthorized force inevitably tends to call into existence another," he said. "If people start expressing their political ideas not only by the color of their shirts, but by preparations to demonstrate their physical force, there will be more colors than one; we may end by finding ourselves black and blue in the scuffle, and we shall be in danger of losing the practice as well as the doctrine of that common citizenship in which one opinion is as free as another, and undivided public authority is respected because it deals out equal treatment according to law. That would mean slipping back into a different conception of political organization which is not the least an improvement on British practice, and which inevitably leads to rival attempts at bullying people we do not happen to like."

Common citizenship is still more precious to most of us than membership in a shirted gang. And we still, as a Nation, prefer to respect an undivided authority which does deal out equal treatment and deals it according to law.

Fashion Hints (In Morals)

Postoffice, Wednesday.

THESE are nervous times for ethical reactionaries. It looks as if old-fashioned morality might become the newest fashion. And every fighter knows there is no fun in fighting except on the unpopular side.

"Only yesterday" all the revolutionaries hailed Bertrand Russell's "Scientific Outlook" as the liberation of sex from the bondage of conservatism and as the final fracture of the Family. Now comes another philosopher—a man no older than Russell, if you please; a hitherto rather radical philosopher—and publishes a book which is hailed as the liberation of sex from the slavery of Russellism and the final restoration of the Family.

The rollicking Russellites contended that all our forefathers' sex-taboos were male-made and made in order to put the male in places of power. The male devised the idea of the Family as the unit of society and the idea of the father as the boss of that unit—after which the rest was easy for him.

If you granted this premise, the correct method of attacking its alleged results was easy, too. Women were human beings. They had the same rights as men. To secure those rights all you had to do was to destroy the Family. Let's all be as free as the old man!

Thus Russell's disciples. The disciples of the disciples of Russell said, in effect: "In everything except morals, let's be as free as the old man; but in morals, let's be as free as the old man's dog."

This, at all events, is a generous rendering of the Russell interpretation made by G. E. Newsom, of Selwyn College, Cambridge—the English Cambridge. Well-named Mr. Newsom is the anti-Russell philosopher in question. His book, which Scribners publish, is called "The New Morality."

The Family, he sets out to prove, existed before father made it an instrument for his own awful selfishness. The Family is necessary to the progress, even to the continuance, of civilization. The Russellites would really devaluate sex. It is better to devaluate father. So let's free Woman by restoring the Family.

Mr. Newsom intimates that mother-domination may have preceded father-dictatorship. He points out that there are still extant matrilineal tribes (what a gorgeous term!) wherein "the significance of fatherhood is well understood." He goes on to argue that, although the Russell theory may suit the convenience of some of its devotees, it would defeat its originator's purpose.

He says that the Russell morality is founded upon "a doctrine of primitive man which belittles what is fine in our inheritance from the animals." Its ethic of sex is faulty because it disregards the factor of potentially permanent devotion recognized by all psychologists. Its estimate of motherhood is erroneous because it assumes that all women "could cast off motherhood as easily as they cast off an old shoe." Far from being a liberation, its philosophy of politics would eliminate individual endeavor by placing the State "under an almless tyranny of science."

About all this, Mr. Newsom is as materialistic as a Stalin and as cold-blooded as a free-lover. He makes no appeal to tradition. He never summons religious authority. He subpenas science to convict science. And he finds the Russellian morality already obsolescent.

He isn't easy reading. You can't even paraphrase him into easy reading. Reinhold Neibuhr has attempted to summarize Newsom—and this is the result:

"The unity and the stability of the Family are necessary conditions for the proper expression of vital impulses so organically related to each other that parental devotion and filial piety are inextricably intertwined with the sex impulse. The (Russell) morality is a process of 'devaluating, desocializing and devitalizing sex' until finally it is reduced to a mechanical function subordinate to the will of political oligarchs."

The true morality, on the other hand, is "an expression of the unity of natural impulse with ideals of the spirit, and does justice to the organic relation between the sex urge and the maternal, paternal and filial relationships which lie at the basis of all cooperative living."

No, not a bit easy reading, we should say. We might modestly say, "Rather troublesome."

But so is Russell. Russell, in fact, is so much more so that one might venture a digressive essay on the proposition that the easier are the morals the more difficult is the style. Which even the serious Russellites will agree is probably just as well; it is a deterrent for the unready. Whatever they are, light morals are not for light minds.

Anyhow, we trust that you appreciate Mr. Newsom's side in the controversy; we got it, even if it did take us longer to get it than it will take you to read this Column.

As for the Russell side, that has been sufficiently expounded elsewhere and everywhere. . . .

So the Russellites have wiped out the old-fashioned morality and want to abolish what's left of the Family, in order to—well, they say it is simply in order to get rid of father.

And the Newsomites want to rebuild the old-fashioned morality and restore the ancient form of the Family by—well, they would doubtless call it putting father where he properly belongs.

We don't pretend to predict how the whole dispute is going to turn out. But it certainly looks as if the matter which side wins, father's future will lie behind him.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

IT is not difficult to understand Gen. Johnson's determination to codify the wire companies—the Western Union, Postal and the telephone company. Codes are his ambition, they are his obsession. Just as it was said to be Charley Mitchell's ambition to acquire a billion dollars, so it is the general's to codify every industry in the United States. Energetic men have different ways of exhausting their energy.

BARGERON.

Many students think that it was Mitchell's thwarting of the Federal Reserve Board's effort to check the stock market inflation that brought on the depression. It remains to be seen what Johnson's ambition to codify the country will do.

• • • •

Ever since he has been code bent the telephone company and Western Union have appealed to him as the highest codification rung to reach. They have resisted codification, therefore what could more whet the appetite of such a codifier as he than the prospect of bringing them to taw. Like all men of ambition and energy he probably thinks this one accomplishment would satisfy him, but it wouldn't. Satisfaction doesn't come until shortly before time for one to die.

The general made another speech out West the other day, and from the intoxication of his words he is again buoyed to make the wire codification try. I think his greatest tonic came in the last phrase of his speech. "For God's sake let's not turn back," he exclaimed.

When I heard that, I knew he would come back here and attempt something. I am not surprised that it is the codification of the wire companies. From the present perspective that seems about as high in life as a codifier could reach.

• • • •

So while I understand his determination I should nevertheless give a pretty penny to hear him explain just how this will help us in the "more abundant life" scheme, just how this will make for better conditions for any of us; in fact, just how it will help anybody but the Morgan house and the general himself.

Of course, the proposed code will provide minimum wages and maximum hours for the employes. But all three companies are willing to accept a code providing for this. It is therefore not in point.

Bear in mind now that there is no proposal to dissolve any of these companies or to break up a monopoly. Neither is it proposed to lower rates. Indeed, rates for leased wires will be increased and sundry other services which are now given, free will call for a charge. For one thing a charge will have to be made for call boxes by which you call a messenger and with which practically every office in town is now equipped.

• • • •

The truth is that the only thing codification will accomplish—aside from higher rates—is a better break for the Postal. The Postal wants a code. The telephone company and Western Union do not. Under a code the two dissenting companies will have to make certain charges that will give the Postal a better chance to compete. The Western Union and telephone company have an abundance of wires which they are able to lease to many business enterprises more cheaply than would be their costs of sending messages back and forth over the regular wires. The Postal hasn't this equipment, so it would like to force more reliance upon the regular message transmission system.

I don't suppose anyone has any objection to the Postal making money, or getting out of its difficulties. It has been in trouble for several years. Its losses run around $3,000,000 annually. Clarence Mackey lost control of it several years ago and it is now controlled by the Morgan house. Reputedly the Morgan house has about $40,000,000 sunk in the property. Codification of the wire companies would tend to get it out of this particular hole.

• • • •

Unlike many others, I have no objection to their getting out of the hole. I was one of the few who got no kick out of their being thrown to the wolves before the Senate committee that time. But why we, through increased costs, should have to get them out of this hole is something I can't understand. As a matter of fact, they impressed me as being very efficient and without any need of assistance. But we must do something for the general. Let's take up a collection and present him with a basket of embroidered codes. I tell you, it would be cheaper.

Stafford Seeks 2 Holdup Men

Carpenter Is Trussed and Robbed by Riders in His Auto.

Fredericksburg, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Two holdup men, an automobile thief, chicken house marauders and the parties responsible for the mysterious burning of an automobile on the Richmond-Washington highway last night were sought today by Stafford County and State police.

Two hitchhikers who held up and robbed W. L. Hartley, Verlington carpenter, of $50 and his automobile were the principal objects of the search. Hartley was robbed after being bound and gagged near Stafford High School early today.

Police believe the same two men responsible for the firing of a stolen car near Falmouth shortly before Hartley picked up the hitchhikers.

Thieves who stole 50 chickens from the coops of James Boutchyard and Billy Manning in Falmouth are suspected of having previously stolen the truck of A. L. Snellings, also of Falmouth, to carry off their loot.

Japan Ignores Pacts, Moves For Big Navy

Nation Told Protection From Enemies Is Needed.

Tokyo, May 8 (U.P.).—Admiral Mineo Osumi, minister of the navy, announced today that Japan, facing rising opposition abroad, must throw off treaty restrictions and proceed with construction of a navy equal to any.

The naval minister carried his fight for a "big navy" to the people of the empire.

In an impassioned address before the conference of prefectural governors, he asked that they explain the nation's needs as a rising sea power. Osumi appealed for support from every citizen, declaring the program is essential to protect Japan from her enemies.

Osumi intimated again that Japan at the 1935 naval conference will demand equality with the United States and Great Britain.

"The next naval conference," he said, "will not concern our navy alone, but may decide the destiny of the empire.

"Japan must take this opportunity to free herself from unfavorable restrictions of existing treaties to assure security in accordance with the changed international situation."

Admiral Osumi predicted a complicated situation at the naval conference, adding, "The military preparations of the powers, especially their military establishments in the Far East, makes one think of increasing difficulties ahead for Japan."

The reference was regarded as indicating Japan may use Britain's improvement of her base at Singapore, and Soviet Russia's activities at Vladivostok, as a basis for her parity demands at the naval parley.

Osumi's speech was interpreted as indicating the minister intends to present his naval program to the Diet shortly.

Loadings Reveal Gains In Industrial Activities

Huntington, W. Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Railroad freight reports show a marked revival of industrial business in the Huntington district extending from Point Pleasant to Kenova. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad executives report an increase of 40 per cent during last month over March in outgoing freight and reports from industrial heads indicating a further substantial gain for May.

Many unshipped orders were carried over into May by several large industrial plants, a survey discloses. Inbound freight also showed a large gain, but figures on this are not yet complete.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

DR. ROOSEVELT EXAMINES THE PATIENT AGAIN.

Doctor—Well, Sam, here it is May; how do you feel now?

Uncle Sam—I never was more uncertain about my real condition.

Doctor—You look great to me. I think you've done much better than expected.

Uncle Sam—It all depends on what you expected.

• • • •

Uncle Sam—That's NRA—National Rouge Application.

• • • •

Doctor—No matter where you get your color, it's doing you good. Why, you were as white as a sheet when I was first called in.

Uncle Sam—Don't be silly. When you were called in things were so bad we hadn't any sheets.

• • • •

Doctor—Now, I'm most anxious to get the real lowdown on your condition today after 14 months under my care.

Uncle Sam—So am I!

Doctor—We've been trying every type of treatment on you.

Uncle Sam—Do I know it! I don't know whether I've been a man or a guinea pig.

Doctor—At any rate, I'm anxious to take you out of the guinea pig class as soon as it's safe. I've a feeling that you are in such good shape now it would be okay to leave you alone for a time.

Uncle Sam—That would be swell, doctor. I've appreciated all the conditioning pills, but I'd like to see how I would get along with no medicine cabinet to guide me.

Doctor—Of course, I don't want to make the mistake of pronouncing you cured and then having you have a relapse. Think how I would feel!

Uncle Sam—Think how I would feel!

• • • •

Doctor—All the specialists, nurses and anesthetists are still here in Washington anxious and willing to continue treatment, but there seems to be a feeling on the outside that you have had enough. How do you feel about it?

Uncle Sam—I don't want to appear ungrateful, but I often wonder if I wouldn't have been entirely well by this time if I hadn't had so much attention.

Doctor—Oh, you've been reading Republican editorials, that's all.

Uncle Sam—Say, lissen, doc, suppose you call off the artificial respiration squad and all those pulmotor men and just see what happens?

Doctor—I may do it, Sam, but just between ourselves I will have to do it very quietly.

Uncle Sam—Why?

Doctor—Well, you see, all the specialists planned on your being sick a long time and there'd be an awful row if I disappointed 'em.

THE INSULL WELCOME.

Mr. Insull arrived in New York the other day, the reception selection, if any, being "Strike Up the Band; Here Comes a Sailor!"

"A cutter went down the bay to meet the former utilities magnate."—News item. You know the type, a coupon cutter with plenty of draft.

But in the days of Mr. Insull's affluence, or back when the coupon clipping was really good, nothing would have done but a clipper ship.

"Insull? Insull?" repeated Elmer Twitchell this morning. "You don't mean the female impersonator, do you?"

Judge Warns Rum Peddlers

Norfolk Jurist Says He Will Deal Harshly With Offenders.

Norfolk, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Official warning that violators of the Federal internal revenue act by illegal traffic in whisky are in grave danger of penitentiary sentences was sounded in Federal court here today by Judge Luther B. Way.

"I am not going to be easy on these violators," Judge Way stated. "They are going to be penitentiary cases if they keep up."

Floyd John Beem, former Navy enlisted man, was the first internal revenue violator to face Judge Way since repeal of prohibition. He had an excellent Navy record and would have lost a monthly pension of $49, had he been given a jail sentence, pleaded guilty to the charge. He was fined $300, a prison term of two years and a $1,100 extra penalty was suspended for two years. Since the prison term is suspended, Beem will not lose his pension. He paid the $300 fine.

William R. Batten, pleading guilty to transportation of 80 gallons of whisky, was fined $200.

The National Gallery

HUBERT DURRETT STEPHENS, Senator from Mississippi. One of the really old-time statesmen both in appurtenances and floor delivery. Born 58 years ago at New Albany, Union County, Miss. Received common school education, graduating in law from University of Mississippi. Admitted to bar before reaching majority. Elected district attorney, 1907, resigning to race for Congress, of which he was a member from the Sixty-second to Sixty-sixth Congresses, 1911-1921. Elected to U. S. Senate to succed former Senator John Sharp Williams. Reelected, 1928, for term ending 1935. Seldom orates, but if and when in typical Southern statesman style. Short, semibald. Easy-going but stubborn when he fixes his attention on legislation. Prototype of "the" Southern Democrat.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

A Girl Isn't a Gold-Digger Just Because She Likes Winners

By Robert Quillen

A young bachelor whose income is considerably above the average becomes a cynic. He observes that young women make an obvious effort to win his approval, and he learns to think of himself as a good catch. He becomes wary and conceited, and the fear of being married for his money makes him a little ridiculous in the eyes of young women who have no designs on him.

The cynicism of the self-satisfied young male fails to distinguish between avarice and common sense. "All a girl wants," says the cynic, "is a meal ticket. She gives herself to the highest bidder, and a poor man hasn't a chance."

The young man exaggerates. Some girls marry rich men they do not love, but the fact that all girls prefer a man who has money is no indictment of their virtue, but rather a tribute to their good sense.

Do not men admire successful men more than failures? Do not men cultivate the friendship of men more prosperous than themselves?

The successful man seldom is an accident. He possesses certain abilities and commendable qualities not possessed by unsuccessful men. As a result, he attracts other men who admire him and seek his friendship.

If other men prefer the friendship of one of their kind who is successful, why be surprised that women do, also?

Young women prefer the successful man because, nine times in ten, he is a superior man. A woman's love is based on pity or admiration; it looks up, not down. A normal girl doesn't fall in love with an inferior.

And if money itself influences her choice, is not that an evidence of intelligence? Poverty is hateful and hard to bear. Any man will escape it if he can. Why blame a girl because she has wit enough to avoid it?

Girls do fall in love with poor men and find happiness in poverty. If her love is great enough to survive want and insure happiness, even the most practical girl may resign herself to poverty, for happiness is all that matters.

But a new love does not easily survive want, and the girl who permits her heart to be influenced by her reason is but safeguarding her happiness. Would any father of sound sense have her do otherwise?

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

The American Minister to Paraguay.

A man of letters often makes the best ambassador to a foreign country; for he invariably possesses intelligence and is usually a citizen of the world. Daniel Webster offered Washington Irving this position in Spain, and we know the resulting gain to letters; James Russell Lowell was only one of many American authors who have represented us at London; the beloved Maurice Francis Egan went to Denmark; Andrew D. White to Germany and to Russia; Thomas Nelson Page and Robert Underwood Johnson to Italy; and now our Indiana novelist, Meredith Nicholson, is at Paraguay.

There really was an Indiana school, or rather group of authors: James Whitcomb Riley, Edgar Eggleston, Lew Wallace, George Ade, Booth Tarkington, and others. Meredith Nicholson was born in Crawfordsville in that State in 1866; he left school and went to work at the tender age of 15. He worked in a drug store, and the Latin inscriptions on bottles and labels filled him with a curiosity to learn foreign languages. He got two dollars a week in a printing office, and later was a court reporter for the same princely salary.

At the age of 16 he sent a poem to a newspaper and was excited by the receipt of three dollars for it; but he kept buying copies of this journal to see his poem in print, discovered that he had paid much more than what he had got for it, and finally gave up looking for it.

At the age of 21 he had learned by himself Latin, Greek, French, and Italian, and in later life received half a dozen degrees from various universities.

He became known all over America, in the year 1906, by his novel "The House of a Thousand Candles," which had an enormous sale, and like many authors with an early success, he became sick of that particular book, and hated to see or hear any reference to it. It will be remembered that when some one told Walt Whitman how much he admired his poem "O Captain! My Captain!" Whitman replied: "Oh, damn My Captain!"

Mr. Nicholson has written many novels, literary essays, poems, and has taken an active part in politics; in 1933 he was appointed Minister to Paraguay.

Mr. Nicholson is proud of being a Hoosier, and although a man of international experience, insists he is really provincial. He loves the community where he was born, and most of his books are interpretations of it. He is a 100 per cent American in the real and not in the offensive meaning of that phrase.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

IN all that thick volume, "Story Anthology," no tale lifted itself so clear and shining as Tess Slesinger's short story, "Missis Flinders." Just as conspicuously, her first novel, "The Unpossessed" (Simon & Schuster, $2.50) stands head and shoulders above the ruck of what I must call, for want of a better term, the "young and militantly modern school."

By and large, you tell that school by its preoccupations with such topics as Calvinism, the Jewish complex, overintellectualism, sex frustration, abortion, and other, even more clanging tokens of a violent sickness with life. But if I have listed the themes which Miss Slesinger shares with that school, it is only to point out at once that the similarity stops there. For she has written with such brilliance of seeing and feeling, with such an inner stressing of what the good books call the "affirmation of life," that the difference is more of kind than of degree. The little faint hearts and the thinly acid pens do not come near her. Far better that she lead her own school. I trust such will be the outcome.

THEO. HALL.

• • • •

Scene: New York. Time: The present. Dramatis personae: That layer of people whom one of the characters calls "neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring, just lousy intellectuals."

There is Margaret Flinders (perhaps I'd better tell you now that "Missis Flinders" forms the climatic chapter to the book)—loving her husband passionately, hating the way their life puts a premium on her least feminine attributes. There is Miles Flinders, taking his pay-cuts at the office with a kind of treacly self-martyrdom. Deep in him is the conscientious bleakness of a New England farm boyhood—when he slept without pillows and had an Uncle Daniel who "was almost insane with personal struggle." Even Margaret's love means only an escape and a soft smothering to him. He remembers "Margaret's cry in the early days of their marriage: 'I'm going to make you so happy, Miles. I'm going to teach you to sleep with pillows, we're going to be so happy darling.' Happy!" he thinks, "His Uncle Daniel always said his pigs were happy!"

Then there is Jeffrey Blake, writing feebly naughty novels, crying out: "I've always been something of a Lone Wolf," while in the arms of a succession of infatuated women, always running back to the large and comforting bucolic warmth of his wife, Norah.

Central among the characters is Bruno Leonard, a Jewish college professor of liberal leanings, witty, mordant, kindly, and sadly ineffectual. He compares himself with the light-skipping Jeffrey: "No Jew could see anything so straight, so clear; no Jew, if he was besieged by thoughts, could set the thoughts aside and leap, unhindered. A Jew, if he had any brains at all, had twice as much as anyone else; he saw all sides at once and so his hands were tied, his brain stood still, he couldn't leap here and he couldn't leap there." No character in the book, unless it be Margaret Flinders, is so subtly appealing.

This little coterie of friends, along with some young radicals in a university and rich and condescending Mrs. Middleton as "angel," gradually approach the idea of having a "Magazine to end all magazines." A filing-cabinet is bought, endless conversations are held (at one of which, while the nonfactuality of hunger is under discussion, a young girl faints from lack of food), and as a final effort a great benefit party is held—as mad, hilarious, and ironic a scene as I have found in a book.

But that laughter, save in the case of Bruno, is more in Miss Slesinger than in her characters. It is she who holds the tonic and the hope, not they. Their self-questioning remains too in-grown and intense. Yet, working on the theory of opposites, that very spiritual compression points further out than do most like novels. Certainly the class of readers involved will feel that—"the doubters, the worriers, the weighers of the world." For Miss Slesinger writes in an explanatory note: "Whether we like it or not I think intellectuals are a class by themselves, belonging rather less than any other class to society as it functions today; which is why I called the novel 'The Unpossessed.'"

She has written the story of the most sharply typical people of our time and made that story unforgetable. I salute her.

Rites to Be Held at Home of Son, D. C. Jurist.

Though born in Torquay, England, she was a resident of Washington for 88 years. She came here as a child of 8 with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Furse. She was the widow of George H. Given.

"What is the secret of Old Gold's smoothness and throat-ease?" asks Helen Hayes [A RECENT OLD GOLD CONVERT]

HELEN HAYES . . . now appearing in "Mary of Scotland"

Dear Miss Hayes:—

There isn't any mystery about the exceptional smoothness of Old Golds. The whole credit belongs to Mother Nature, Father Time and his ally, Experience.

Old Gold tobacco is picked from the heart of the stalk, where Nature stores her richest tobacco fragrance and flavor. Then it is aged and mellowed at least thirty months. Then it is blended, for delightful mildness and taste appeal, by America's most experienced tobacconists (Est. 1760).

Such tobacco needs no artificial flavoring. And that's the FINAL reason why Old Golds are so easy on the throat; so cool and biteless.

Sincerely,

P. LORILLARD COMPANY, INC.
ESTABLISHED 1760

P. S.—The net of it is this, Miss Hayes: No better tobacco grows than is used in Old Gold. And it's pure. That's why Old Golds are easy on the THROAT and NERVES.

Two Election Judges Cleared

Discriminating Against the Colored Voter in Primary Charged.

Norfolk, Va., May 8 (AP).—An attempt to have two election judges in Hampton indicted on a charge of depriving a colored elector of his vote in the Democratic primary last August 1 failed in United States District Court here yesterday when a grand jury composed of 18 white and two colored men did not return a true bill.

The complaining witness was Dr. Thomas W. Turner, colored, of the Hampton Institute faculty. The two judges named were W. A. Crockett and W. R. Taylor.

Dr. Turner was the principal witness.

Woman Claimant To Marshall Home Appears too Late

Richmond, May 8 (AP).—Chief Justice John Marshall's house, at Ninth and Marshall streets, now owned by the Association for the Preservation of Virginia antiquities, can not be regained by any descendant of the famed jurist, for it was acquired by the City of Richmond for nonpayment of taxes and, in turn, transferred to its present owners.

Such was the official reaction today to a claim advanced by Mrs. Addie Mae Marshall Baker, of Butte County, Calif., a granddaughter of Chief Justice Marshall, that occupants of the Marshall house are without legal right.

In a letter to the Richmond Chamber of Commerce, Mrs. Baker said she is the daughter of Samuel W. Marshall, next to the youngest son of John Marshall, and that her father never was a party to the sale of the property.

"I have not looked into this before, but I have had a hard time raising my children, and now I am unable to work any more," Mrs. Baker wrote. "I think some compensation should not be so bad for me now."

Prosecutor Gives Hiker Ride Ending In the County Jail

Thomas, W. Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Stopping a prosecuting attorney and asking for a ride proved rather expensive for Earl Likens, of Bayard, who was walking along the highway near Thomas with two bottles of liquor visible in his pockets.

He asked Prosecuting Attorney A. G. Bolton for a ride and Bolton replied, "Sure, I'll give you a ride."

Likens was arraigned before Justice O. B. Colling with the two pints in his possession, fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the county jail.

The affair will begin at 9 a. m., with registration and assignment of members to their "tribes," the basis for contests. Then will follow a program of games, nature hikes and kindred things.

In the afternoon will be more games and a council fire, for storytelling, Scout reports and stunts by clubs. The day is under sponsorship of Home Club Agent Esther Brucklacher and County Agents B. Heath Holden, H. C. C. Wiley, W. N. McClung and Neil Bolton.

Another Chicken Goes Under Knife

Hagerstown, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—Taking a hint from another local housewife, who a few weeks ago successfully operateed upon a pet chicken which had swallowed a rubber band, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Forrest opened a chicken's craw and removed a piece of leather shoestring, which the chicken apparently mistook for a worm.

Today the chicken is well on the road to recovery, the incision in the craw having been sewed up with a needle and thread.

Culpeper Enjoined In Sewage Dumping

Court Grants 18 Months to Build Plant.

Culpeper, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Judge Alexander Browning, of the Culpeper Circuit Court, decided in favor of J. A. Bragg for an injunction to stop the Town of Culpeper from dumping sewage into Mountain Run, which passes through Bragg's farm.

The court allowed the town 18 months to build a disposal plant for sewage. The proposed plant will cost approximately $60,000.

The town has just issued bonds for approximately $140,000 to construct a municipal electric light plant.

Sewer Project Resumed.

Spectator Seizes Liquor Evidence, Caught in Chase

Richmond, May 8 (Spl.).—Half a gallon of ardent spirits, placed with other "evidence" on the police court floor, proved so tempting yesterday it was seized by a man in the courtroom. According to Ben Tucker, clerk, court was over for the day and "everyone's head was turned but mine, and he did not think I was looking."

The alert Mr. Tucker sounded an alarm and the man fled with the liquor. Courtroom attendants started in pursuit. Through the city hall basement, up the steps, down Tenth street to the Capitol Square the chase went. Pedestrians, children, dogs and even squirrels had been added to the pursuers by the time the culprit had reached Capitol Square where he was overtaken by officers.

Brought back to police court and charged with being "disorderly," the man, who said his name was Robert Lewis, was fined $10 by Justice Elben C. Folkes.

Hagerstown Host Says Guest Was Dillinger

Hagerstown, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—While Franklin Alder believes he had breakfast yesterday with John Dillinger, No. 1 desperado, police were reluctant to believe the bandit is in this section.

Alder said a man with a strong resemblance to Dillinger came to his home and asked for something to eat. The manner of his guest, said Alder, indicated a high state of nervousness. After breakfast the man asked the direction out of the city. Alder immediately notified the police.

Chamber Official Denies NRA Attack

Suggestion of Junking It Called Unthinkable.

Bristol, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Discussing "the new Chamber of Commerce" as linked with the recovery of business, Ralph Bradford, of Washington, commercial organization chief of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, yesterday told a luncheon gathering of 65 Bristol business men "it is unthinkable that we should want to junk the NRA."

The meeting was attended by chamber of commerce officials from Johnson City, Tenn.; Abingdon, Va.; Greeneville and Elizabethton, Tenn.

"We are not in an emergency," Mr. Bradford said, "for an emergency comes suddenly and unexpectedly. This is just another period of liquidation when the excessive profits of 'rugged individualism' must be charged off."

Cumberland to Offer Paving Bonds Again

Cumberland, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—An ordinance was passed yesterday authorizing the sale of $100,000 bonds to pay the State for the paving of Front street.

These bonds were offered some time ago, but the bid was regarded as too low. It is now thought the city will be able to obtain a good price. A few days ago it got a substantial premium on sewer bonds.

Fall Festival In Moscow to Attract World

All Theaters to Take Part; Sophie Before Royalty; Amusement Chat.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

The recognition of the U. S. S. R. by this Government has reawakened interest in the Russian theater and the product it may have to offer the outside world.

Additional importance, therefore, attaches to the announcement that perhaps the most ambitious and varied program of dramatic, operatic and ballet productions ever assembled for a single schedule of theatrical events in modern times is promised in the detailed outline of plans for the Second Moscow Theater Festival which has just reached this country.

In the ten-day period from September 1 to 10, 11 repertory companies of the first rank will collaborate—and vie—with each other in presenting to hordes of expected visitors from all over the world a series of performances of classic and modern comedy and tragedy, of grand opera, ballet and motion pictures, which bids fair to surpass the much-discussed First Moscow Theater Festival, held last June.

Americans to Attend.

Detailed plans will be made known shortly for the considerable group of American theater lovers who will attend the festival under the leadership of Oliver M. Sayler, well-known authority on the Russian Theater and a recent visitor to Washington, and Marjorie Barkentin, under the auspices of the Drama League of America.

As was pointed out by Mr. Sayler during a visit of some length in this office, if the Soviet government is rigid in its refusal to permit any major dramatic or musical company to come to America in the immediate future, as was recently announced, it is apparently willing to go to unusual lengths in marshaling all of its artistic resources on this occasion for the benefit of visitors from this and other countries.

All Theaters Included.

In the festival program, not a single theater of the first importance is missing. Last year, the chief burden of the program was sustained by the Moscow Art Theater, the Kamerny Theater and the State Opera and Ballet companies. This year, in addition, the roster includes Meyerhold's Theater, the Vakhtangoff Theater, the Jewish State Theater, the Second Moscow Art Theater, the Stanislavsky Opera Studio and the time-honored Small State Theater, not to mention the Children's Theater and various cinema performances.

The range of plays, operas and ballets likewise appears to be much wider than at last year's festival, almost equally divided between classic and modern subjects and treatment, thus typifying the new freedom which has been conferred on the artists of the Russian stage.

For the first time in more months than I can remember—or is it years?—this desk is paid a visit by Barnee, dynamic young conductor of Maxim Lowe's Shoreham Hotel Orchestra. Barnee is not only fired with a fine ambition to go places and do things professionally, but at the moment also is on fire with enthusiasm over the opening of the Shoreham Terrace on Decoration Day. This, says he, will make room for several hundred more people and adds the hope that this department will be among them. Flatterer!

Which reminds me that time flies, and no foolin'. It was only so many years ago that Barnee was a comparatively small boy by the name of Barnett Breeskin, tagging around the third floor of the Metropolitan Theater Building with his dad, Daniel Breeskin. And now look at him!

A Classic Returns.

The Leader Theater, one of the major outlets for the artistic impulses of Mr. Sidney Lust, among the foremost of Washington independent motion picture exhibitors, is going "arty" with a vengeance tomorrow, Thursday and Friday, when "The Armored Cruiser Potemkin," the celebrated Sergei M. Eisenstein masterpiece of realism, will be accorded its first and only Washington showing since sound was added to the picture.

"Potemkin" is the same film that created new records at the old coffee-and-cigarettes Little Theater, on Ninth street, several years ago when it was presented for the first time on any screen in the Capital. Press and public were unanimous in their verdict that here was a tremendously effective screen depiction of a grim and grizzly story.

Based on Actual Revolt.

The story, of course, is based on the 1906 revolt of the crew of the Russian cruiser after which the picture is named. It is historically accurate and abounds in those expressive touches for which its director is noted.

Sound effects and a running narrative have been added to "Potemkin" since it was last seen in this city and the addition of the sound track is said to have sharpened both the interest and the effectiveness and spirit of the action.

"Potemkin" will be given continuous showings at the Leader from 10 a. m. to 11 p. m., with appropriate auxiliary short reels to supplement the feature.

Tabloid reviews, postcarded from New York by Miss Dorothea Lewis, of The Post's reviewing staff, week-ending in New York:

"Liked 'Dodsworth' very much, when I got through cursing our rotten seats! A beautiful job of dramatization. Huston is swell; not so keen about Fay Bainter."

"Believe 'Yellow Jack' is the high point of my season. Really thrilling and so simple and honest. Theater to be proud of. Sidney Howard is quite a lad to look up to."

"And the Little Theater Union's race riot play, 'Stevedore,' down on Fourteenth street, was exciting, unusual and superlatively well done by Negroes who don't let acting clutter up their playing."

"Two more to go—'New Faces' and 'Shining Hour.' See you later."

Sophie Tucker, the first and last of the red-hot mamas, will play a command performance before King George and Queen Mary at the Palladium Theater, London, tonight, according to private advices from Paula Gould. Mme. Tucker's New York stentoress, who ought to know.

Lest you quake in your boots and burst into a cold perspiration, know that the rotund and jovial Soph has a new repertoire of songs written especially for her London engagements by Jack Yellen, her personal composer. A majority of these she introduced at the Palladium last night.

From the Palladium the famous songstress, who recently all but set fire to the Earle Theater in this city with some of her lyrics, goes to the Holborn Empire. She will double at the Cafe de Paris during all her vaudeville engagements in the British capital.

Despite whatever precautions may have been taken, knowing Mme. Soph as we do on this side, it seems no more than fair to admonish Their Majesties to hang onto their hats when she gets going under a full head of steam!

Pleasant notes from Daniel Frohman, president of the Actors' Fund of America; Sue Seymour Cooke, his right-hand "man" in putting on the Actors' Fund Benefits, and Keane Waters, stage manager, for our meager efforts to be of help on the occasion of Sunday night's gala performance at the National. The pleasure was all ours, to coin a phrase!

The meteorological idiosyncrasies of the past few days, with temperatures soaring to midsummer levels and high winds blowing, are as clear as tropical daylight now.

Frank Braden is in town lighting fires under the dramatic desks on behalf of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus.

So how do you pronounce c-a-l-l-i-o-p-e?

Simon Legree and Little Eva?

No, indeed; it must be the whip that gave you that idea. As a matter of fact, the young man is all done up as a gaucho and the pretty blonde, as you can plainly see, gives no sign of being about to go to Heaven on a strand of piano wire. They are—if you have not already guessed—Lanny Ross, the radio singer, and Ann Sothern, former stage star, as they appear in one sequence of "Melody in Spring," Mr. Ross' first starring vehicle for Paramount.

"HER MASTER'S VOICE." S. E. Cochran offers the National Theater Players in the comedy in two acts and five scenes by Clare Kummer. Directed by John McKee; settings by Charles Squires. Reviewed Monday night by W. A. Whitney.

THE CAST.

Queena Farrar.....Ruth Abbott
Mrs. Martin.....Adelaide Hibbard
Ned Farrar.....Roy Roberts
Craddock.....Burke Clarke
Aunt Min.....Kathryn Givney
Mr. Twilling.....Raymond Bramley
Phoebe.....Mary Loane

Blithely ignoring such a superfluous thing as a plot in the usual involved sense, and yet, offering an evening of continuous wit, the National Theater Players launched into their second production—the same work which served the second week of the regular season last fall: "Her Master's Voice."

The Kummer play is extraordinary in that it is able to submerge any unified and dominant narrative and rely solely on brilliantly written lines which seem to flow spontaneously as amusing situations arise. Yet there is, actually, of course, a plot—but that does not matter, for it remains in the charm of the lines that the attraction of the play lies.

Following the established practice of the players—of rotating the principal parts without regard to leading lady and leading man—Kathryn Givney takes the center of the stage and continuously holds it for her well-nigh perfect delineation of the aunt who would reshape her niece's life, notwithstanding her being a happy wife and mother.

To the leads are given the wife and husband roles, played respectively by Ruth Abbott and Roy Roberts, who this week needs must resign some of the preeminence of their stellar positions to their associates by the very nature of the comedy.

Adelaide Hibbard has another of those mother roles which she does so admirably, and Burke Clark and Mary Loane, who joins the cast this week, are cast as two amusing servants. Raymond Bramley is a debonair multimillionaire.

To the encomiums heaped upon "Her Master's Voice" on the occasion of its premiere in the same theater on October 9, 1933, with Roland Young and Laura Hope Crews in the principal roles, little can here be added.

Hodge Comedy At Belasco Is Defeatist Play

Amusing Overtones Unable to Obscure the Serious Intent of Author.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

"THE WIND AND THE RAIN." Wee and Leventhal present a comedy in three acts and six scenes by Merton Hodge. Directed by Lowell Gilmore and John Schafer. At the Belasco Theater.

THE CAST.

Mrs. McFie.....Lillian Brennard Tonge
Gilbert Raymond.....Burford Hampden
John Williams.....Leslie Barrie
Charles Tritton.....Morgan Farley
Paul Duhamel.....Marcel Journet
Annie Hargreaves.....Wendy Atkin
Jill Mannering.....Barbara Weeks

Peter Morgan.....Walter Holbrook

By Nelson B. Bell.

There is something acutely disquieting in the Freudian tinge Merton Hodge has given this play of a youth bred to such reliance upon the will and guidance of his mother, and a young woman rather under her influence also, that upon the completion of five years of medical study in Edinburgh and the loss of his mentor and his sweetheart he is unable to face the world and go it alone.

Mr. Hodge denominates his piece a comedy. In theme and basic intent it is less a comedy than a rather pathetic tale of tragic masculine incompetence, predicated upon the most abstruse psychological quirks of which the psychiatrists are aware.

It may all be summed up in the reiterated theory of one of the characters that in the career of any man, "love is everything; without it inspiration dies." That is the total message of the play. If one subscribe to that, "The Wind and the Rain" is a drama of unimpeachable logic and integrity; if not, it falls considerably short of the loftiest ideals of character and attainment.

Heavy With Verbosity.

Along the tedious way of the play's verbose development there is little action. There is, however, a modicum of comic investiture, founded upon the indifference to his scholastic duties of a young student who has spent four years in practically fruitless effort to accomplish two years' work, when the play opens. This lusty youth—played with skill and little too much noise by Burford Hamplen—is the one ray of light in many drab scenes. There are some good laughs tucked away in his part, but not enough to salvage the entire three acts on the side of brightness and gayety.

Morgan Farley, as the young medical student away from home for the first time, plays with a wistfulness and ingenuousness that are in thorough keeping with the character through two and a half of the three acts. His final scene, however, when he returns to the girl who thought she was merely a passing fancy of his school days—a sort of "college widow"—is pretty hard to take if one is to detach the play from a little too clinical study in abnormality.

Some Clever Bits.

Lillian Brennard Tonge, as the Scotch boarding-house keeper, barring a few lapses in lines with which she seemed not always too familiar, contributes an effective bit of comic characterization and Wendy Atkin and Barbara Weeks both acquit themselves creditably as the two girls in Charles Tritton's life. The remainder of the cast is undistinguished.

"The Wind and the Rain," when all is said and done, must be written down as another of the season's dramas of the defeatists, not wholly unrelated to "The Green Bay Tree" in theme and generally introverted effect.

If that is what you like, there it is—matinees Thursday and Saturday.

Trial of Krout To Open Today

Full Bench Will Conduct Hagerstown Case at Cumberland.

Cumberland, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—Trial of Claude H. Krout, 47, indicted by a Washington County grand jury at Hagerstown for the murder of Owen D. Sherley, hotel owner, will open tomorrow before a full bench in the Allegany County Circuit Court. The trial was removed here on motion by the State.

L. Lloyd Harshman, State's attorney for Washington County, will be assisted in the prosecution by Maj. William A. Huster, State's attorney of this county. Omer T. Kaylor is attorney for Krout.

Associate Judge Frank C. Wagaman, of Hagerstown, with Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan and Associate Judge Albert A. Doub, will occupy the bench.

The trial of Eugene P. "Gene" Nixon, this city, charged with manslaughter, is set for trial following the conclusion of the Hagerstown case.

He is held in connection with the deaths of Joseph Paul Lichliter, 23, and Ira "Cocky" Crabtree, 28, who were killed in an explosion of an alleged still in the basement of the Nixon home January 17.

2 Sailors Indicted In Attack on Girl

New Charge Also Returned Against Another.

Norfolk, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Two sailors attached to the naval operating base yesterday were indicted by the corporation court grand jury on charges of criminally assaulting a 12-year-old Ocean View girl.

The men, named in separate indictments, are John G. McNaughton and Barney Peller. One offense is alleged to have occurred late in April and the other May 1.

A new indictment was also returned against Stanley King, alias Paul Anderson, another Navy enlisted man, on a charge of criminally attacking a 14-year-old girl several weeks ago. He was acquitted of a charge of attacking a 16-year-old girl last month. An indictment previously had been returned against him in the case reported by the grand jury yesterday and the new indictment, the wording slightly changed, will be substituted for the old one.

Myersville Voting Lax, Results in Tie

36 of 200 Electors Split on Burgess Choice.

Middletown, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—The anticipated heavy vote failed to materialize in the biennial city election at Myersville yesterday and only 36 persons showed enough interest to vote. The town has a registration of about 200.

The two candidates for burgess, Columbus W. Haupt and John D. Mause, incumbent, tied with 18 votes each, necessitating another election for this office. The board will set the date some time this week. William S. Wachtel and George E. Castle, members of the old commssioner board, were re-elected. Elmer E. Raymer, also a member of the old board, was defeated by John M. Grossnickle, retired rural mail carrier, by nine votes.

Dovell to Address W. & M. Alumni

Williamsburg, Va., May 8 (AP).—Ashton Dovell, floor leader of the Virginia House of Delegates, a Williamsburg attorney and a graduate of William and Mary in the class of 1908, will deliver the alumni address at an elaborate alumni day program honoring the fifteenth anniversary of Dr. J. A. C. Chandler, as president of the institution.

The celebration has been set for June 9.

Charles A. Taylor, alumni secretary, today announced the program would include registration, alumni association meeting, the Dovell address, memorial service to alumni who have died, outdoor dinner on the campus, class reunions, sightseeing, a musical program, reception and dance.

Queen's Purse Lost at Festival

Winchester, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Efforts are being made to find a pocketbook belonging to Mrs. John Hay Whitney, queen of the recent apple fete here, and a topcoat belonging to Harry F. Byrd, jr., son of Senator Byrd, which were taken from the cloakroom of a club during the fete.

Same Jurist Rules Today on Ball Game for Like Purpose.

Richmond, May 8 (Spl.).—Sunday movies for charity were boomed today when Police Justice Elben C. Folkes, in a friendly test case, ruled the performances did not transgress the blue laws forbidding labor on the Sabbath. Tomorrow he will pass on a similar case, involving a professional baseball game with part of the proceeds going to charity.

The movie test was brought against two employes of a local theater who worked on Sunday for the benefit show. Both were dismissed.

Justice Folkes said he would try each case coming before him on its merits, and in today's hearing he was satisfied the association, for which the benefit was given on Sunday, is a worthy charitable organization meriting support of the public. He stated that under the circumstances he believes it was necessary to hire a motion picture operator of experience to see to the running of the film and to have ushers to take care of the crowds.

Gray Haddon said he knew of no worthier charity than the association, but a decision in its favor would mean that a charitable organization might engage in a business on Sunday.

Opening of Skyline Drive Is Delayed

Winter Weather Held Up Work on Highway.

Staunton, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Perhaps another tourist season will pass before Skyline Drive, in Shenandoah National Park, is opened to the public.

Oscar L. Chapman, Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior, has written Representative A. Willis Robertson, of the Seventh Virginia District, as follows:

"Because of the severe winter conditions, a shutdown on the project was necessary, by reason of which the contractors have been allowed an extension of 43 days, which will bring the time for completion of their contracts about October 1. However, both the National Park Service and the Bureau of Public Roads will do all in their power to speed up the work so that if possible the road may be opened in August.

Federal Campaign Hits Moonshiners

Roanoke, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Within the past month a small force of Federal agents have struck a heavy blow at moonshining activities near Roanoke.

About 25 stills, 1,500 gallons of illicit liquor and almost 100,000 gallons of mash have been destroyed, the agents report.

Nine arrests on bootlegging charges have been made in the last two weeks and 11 unlicensed distilleries, 722 gallons of liquor and 39,000 gallons of mash destroyed.

7 Escape Serious Hurts in 4 Crashes

Clifton Forge, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Lady Luck must be on the lookout for Clifton Forge people, as seven involved in four automobile accidents during the last two days escaped serious injury.

John Gallagher was run over by his own car while cranking it; Joseph Gallagher was struck by a car driven by John Booze; B. C. Goodwin fell asleep while driving on Route 60, near here, and went over a 20-foot embankment, and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Bodkin, Paul Bodkin and Mrs. Green were in a car which struck a stone wall near Longdale and turned over.

Trial Justice Post Goes to Walker

King George, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Benjamin Wyatt Walker has been appointed trial justice of King George County by Judge Frederick W. Coleman. He will take office on July 1.

Judge Walker, son of J. W. Walker, of Comorn, was elected justice of the peace in 1923, and appointed judge of the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court for King George in 1930, and has held both offices since.

Four Routes Included In Surfacing Program

Fredericksburg, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Four routes in this immediate section are included in the 1934 surface-treating program, which will be started this week by the State Highway Department.

Highway officials expect to complete surfacing of Route 3, Fredericksburg to King George Courthouse link, by May 20; May 12 is Warrenton road, from Falmouth to the Fauquier County line; May 12, Route 209, from Post Oak to Paytes, and Route 7, from Spotsylvania Courthouse to Brock road.

The Ambassador, one of the handsomest of the corps, mingled with the guests.

Former officers of the Junior League, under the chairmanship of its present president, Miss Katherine Dunlop will serve tea.

Mrs. John Selby, assisted by Mrs. George Walker, will direct the waitress group. The waitresses, some of whom are recent debutantes, will include Miss Elizabeth Lyster, Miss Elizabeth Gill, Miss Alice Fleming, Miss Dorothy Tirrell, Miss Mary McDowell, Mrs. Harold Gillespie, Mrs. Charles L. Sturdevandt, jr., Miss Eliza Mitchell, Miss Elsie Ekengren, Miss Christine Ekengren, Miss Dorothea Sowers, Miss Jane Francies, Mrs. Charles Foy, Miss Katherine Pearson and Miss Betsy Burke.

Miss Brown Lee McKee, Miss Celia Robb, Miss Silence Wilson, Miss Margaret Mackall, Mrs. F. Eberhart Haynes, Miss Patsy Douglas, Miss Helen Clifford, Miss Polly Foote, Miss Carolyn Johnson, Miss Suzanne Hill and Miss Louise Pittman.

Sponsorship of the horse show is being assumed by the Junior League to raise funds for its work in behalf of local charities.

Good-By Felts, Hello Summer Straws, Fabric

Hats in White and Pastels in Wide Variety Sell for Little.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

FAREWELL to winter felts and huzza for summer straws! Gone the blacks, browns and blues that bore the brunt of sleets and snows, and enter the whites and pastels to bask in summer suns.

When most shoppers buy their warm weather chapeaux, they prefer to pay little and buy often. A light hat is apt to become weather beaten and droopy from repeated cleanings, no matter how much it costs to begin with. So several inexpensive summer hats are regarded as the most satisfactory thing.

Catering both to shoppers' taste and pocketbooks, a downtown store is selling a wide variety of summer models for as little as $2.98.

There are smart crepe turbans, suitable for any occasion, and particularly convenient for automobile drives. Also crepes with brims, both medium and large. These may be bought in all white, or with colored facings.

Wagon wheel linens at this conservative price are sure to prove popular. The extreme brims serve the purpose of a parasol and keeping a flattering shade on the face.

The assortment also includes some light slouch felts, piques and straws.

Siberian Pine.

A Siberian pine bath essence has a number of captivating qualities. Just a few drops of it sprinkled in the water aids in cleansing clogged pores and eliminating indelicate body odors.

Its esthetc appeal is tied up in the refreshing balsam scent it gives to a prosaic tub of water.

Gentlemen who veer away from sweet smelling bath essences delight in the clean out-of-doors fragrance of this one, and find its practical qualities much to their liking.

Convenient Bar.

A Connecticut avenue shop is justly proud of the new bar it has on display. The top is lined with cork to allow for spilled ice, and hilarious fizzes. The edges are bordered with racks to hold twelve glasses and several bottles.

As though these weren't attributes enough, the top lifts off, the legs fold up, so it can be tucked out of sight when not in use.

Apartment dwellers, who from lack of room have had to forego the pleasure and convenience of a bar, will find this one measures up to their needs.

Bridge Players.

Bargain hunting bridge players have a treat in store in the stationery apartment of a downtown store. Duplicate bridge scores are selling for 50 cents a dozen.

Cool But Effective.

Summer is a trying season for those who control the extra poundage by means of girdles and corselets. But now a local shop has some neat little supporters made of cotton mesh and fine filmy net.

They're strong and at the same time sheer. Fitting firmly and comfortably they give sylphlike slimness without the discomforts usually attributed to foundation garments in the hot weather.

Another feature is their price. Some are priced as low as $1.95 and none higher than $5.

* * * *

Waterproff Nifties.

Spring showers and summer storms will mean little to a gentleman clad in a waterproof straw hat. He'll doubtless make for the closest shelter—but that for the sake of his suit. His hat has been chemically processed to stand up under torrential downpours.

These are on sale in a downtown store. They're what's generally termed "pretty nifty."

Versatile Candle Holder.

A pewter candle holder sits in the midst of much bric a brac on the 25-cent table in an F street shop. It was marked down to its present price from a figure considerably higher.

It's spread and height adapt it beautifully to a low hall table, the top of a bookcase or between two vases on the mantelpiece.

Economy on a Bush.

Gardenia plants on sale in a local flower store are a problem for an amateur economist. If she were to figure the price of one bloom and compare that with the price of a plant with anywhere from one to two dozen blooms her calculations would prove the plants amazing bargains at $3 to $5.

Incidentally, they should be kept in mind for Mother's Day. What woman wouldn't revel in a whole bush of gardenias to bloom in her room for weeks?

* * * *

There are some novel bracelets, clips, earrings and pins on display in an F street store.

These are made on metal lace, exquisitely cut to look like finely spun threads. They may be obtained in pastel colors, in a variety of different styles.

Low Heels Make a Bow For Daytime and Evening

Sandals in Bright Colors Will Be the Thing for Summer.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, May 8.—A lot of women who know what's what are going to be down at the heel this year. And contrary to the usual significance of that phrase, they are going to look very neat, very trim, very well-dressed and very much in fashion.

For one of the many new bits of news about shoes is low heels. And by low, we mean low. Heels of only an inch or inch-and-a-half high, broad of base, sturdy and comfortable to walk on. Or to dance on.

Low-Heeled Sandals.

And that last is certainly very different. Low-heeled evening slippers . . . sandals, to be exact.

It's the low-heeled sandal which is the biggest news of daytime shoes, too, and one of these is illustrated at the top of the sketch column.

Put it on with your soft dresses . . . or even with your suits. Not only is it comfortable. It's as good-looking and as flattering to your foot as the usual higher-heeled one.

Notice that the low-heeled evening sandal at the bottom of the sketch column is toeless. That's another new thing about evening shoes. However, if you prefer a less dangerous shoe, you'll find these low-heeled dancing sandals with toes completely covered.

Minimum Shanks.

Elimination would seem to be the trend in shoes . . . with heels cut down and toes cut off. And another new idea bears this out, too . . . the so-called "Shankless" and "phantom shank" shoes.

In the shankless shoe, the leather of the uppers is brought right down under the longitudinal arch of the foot so there is no shank at all to show.

In the phantom shank, the leather is also brought under the arch, but there is a very narrow shank down the center, which, however, does not show unless the foot is turned over.

One of these phantom shank shoes is illustrated in the center of the column, turned so you may see its narrowness.

The full view of the same shoe also illustrates another new fashion . . . the sandalized oxford. It has an opening at the throat which makes it an excellent warm weather oxford.

Bright Colors.

Bright colored shoes are new and of these red is the most popular. These are smartest in informal types with fairly low heels and make gay accents with white costumes.

There's a revival of patent leather, too. These should be accompanied by a patent handbag and together the two accessories make a smart shining accent on the costume's dull finished fabric.

New fabrics are going onto the feet, usually combined with leather. Ribbed effects and tweed patterns are important.

And there are new trimmings. Dark shoes are being piped or underlayed or stitched with white. Colored stitchings, such as red, or dark colors are new. And new shapes in cut-outs include long narrow slits and big port-hole circles which help keep the feet cool.

(Copyright, 1934.)

Footwear of the type described may be found in all the better class shoe shops and department stores in Washington.

Miss Adele Forbes Batcheller has arrived at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Batcheller, at 825 Delafield place, and has announced the plans for her wedding to Mr. LeMoine C. Wheeler, of Rochester, N. Y., which will take place Monday at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, with the Rev. W. W. McIntyre officiating.

Miss Batcheller has been visiting in Rochester for three years with her aunt, Mrs. V. L. Hood. Mrs Hood with her sons, Dickson and Kenneth, will be guests at the wedding.

Mr. Wheeler's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wheeler, already have arrived from Rochester, and will remain in Washington until after the wedding. Miss Helen Batcheller will attend her sister as maid of honor, and Mr. Wheeler will have his father as best man. Mr. Batcheller will give his daughter in marriage. Following the wedding ceremony, and a reception which will follow at the Mayflower, the couple will depart for Boston and New York, and will make their home in Rochester.

Miss Batcheller attended Washington and Lee University. Her father is associated with the Interior Department. Mr. Wheeler is a graduate of the Wheaton School of Finance of the University of Pennsylvania, and is in business in Rochester.

The marriage of Miss Mary Rose Peak, daughter of Col. and Mrs. William L. Peak, of Laurel Hill, Fairfax County, to Mr. Cornelius Francis Ford, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Ford, of Washington, took place Monday in the Church of the Holy Comforter, the Rev. E. J. Nestor officiating.

The church was decorated with palms, pink gladioli and baby's breath. The wedding music was played by Prof. Harry Wheaton Howard.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore a gown of ivory satin fashioned with a tight-fitting waist and court train of old lace. The long veil fell from a tiara or orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white gardenias and lilies of the valley. Miss Agnes Peak, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and wore a peach colored frock made on princess lines and a small turban to match. She carried an old-fashioned nosegay of garden flowers.

The bridesmaids were Miss Inez Ford, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Frances Larkin, of Fairfax Courthouse, and Miss Anna Theresa Peak, sister of the bride. They wore green tulle frocks fashioned with ruffled capes and green picture hats and carried old-fashioned bouquets of garden flowers.

Mr. Joseph McCarthy, of Washington, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. William Peak, jr., Mr. Leo Peak and Mr. Arthur Ford. Following the ceremony a large reception was held at Laurel Hill, the home of the bride's parents.

The bride was assisted in receiving the guests by her mother, who wore a gown of summer brown chiffon with a large picture hat, and the bridegroom's mother, who wore a black lace costume.

The house was decorated with dogwood, white delphinium and white lilacs. The bride and bridegroom left later for a Northern wedding trip, the former wearing a blue traveling costume. Upon their return they will make their home in Washington.

Don't Let Job Get You Down, Says Professor

It's the Over-Conscientious Worker Who's Strained, He Maintains.

THE job of life will "get" everyone who does not develop understanding and judgment, Dr. Benjamin Weems, professor of clinical medicine at Georgetown University, told his listeners at the Mental Hygiene Clinic at Epiphany Church yesterday afternoon. Dr. Weems spoke on "Have I a Job or Does My Job Have Me?"

"Every one of us is serving two masters," Dr. Weems said. "The individual and society. And the conflict and strain is so great a person must be constantly on the lookout to keep his job from getting him.

"The greatest asset a person can have in working at his job is really a quality of genius. That is, the ability to face each phase in life differently. He should take a fresh approach to each problem. Then he must understand himself and exercise judgment in his relationship with others, in his physical life and spiritual life."

The easiest way for a person to let a job get the best of him, Dr. Weems said, was to be overconscientious and self-righteous about it.

"It is the person who works hard at his job because he loves it who does a good job, and thrives on his work," the speaker declared. "It is the person who is driven to his job by conscience who is worn out by it. A virtue can be made a vice, and many people have made conscience vicious."

Dr. Weems pointed out certain safeguards which nature has established to warn the person who is letting the life job "get him." These are halt-calling pain, rest-commanding fatigue, hunger and thirst, the emotions, and the spiritual needs, he explained, and each of these must be gratified in order for a person to live amply and fully.

CAPITAL KITCHEN

Brides Plan Trousseaux; They've Another Problem—Meals.

By Susan Mills.

JUNE BRIDES are doing a lot of planning this month. There are trousseaux to be considered and travel leaflets and new luggage, but after the honeymoon is over the bride will have another important problem on her hands.

Meals for two.

First of all, it is economical to buy cooking utensils that are small, because the big ones deceive the eye and tempt the cook to prepare too much.

Canned goods in very small quantities are poor bargains. If they are bought in medium quantities and the advance meals are carefully planned there will be no waste.

Fresh vegetables may be bought for two or possibl three meals. Leftovers are useful in salads, soups and sometimes souffles.

When kitchenettes are small and time is short, meals built around one main dish are practical. This dish may combine the starchy foods, meats and vegetables in one pot. This method saves pans and patience. One of these is a variation of the welsh rarebit: To the usual rarebit recipe add a little chopped celery, green pepper, an onion browned in butter, a can of tomatoes. Stews of all varieties come under the heading of the all-in-one dish.

When the family of two tires of chops try these meat dishes.

Fillet Mignon with Bananas.

Have the fillet cut one inch thick. Dip each fillet into melted butter and broil from 8 to 10 minutes. Have prepared rounds of toast the same size as the fillets and when broiled place each fillet on a round of toast. Sprinkle each fillet with finely chopped parsley. Surround with horseradish sauce. Serve with fried bananas. For these take bananas with green tips. Cut in half crosswise. Roll pieces in flour and fry in deep hot fat until a golden brown.

Horseradish Sauce.

Fry 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion in butter, but do not brown. Add ½ cup cream and cook several minutes. Put through a sieve and add the yolk of an egg beaten up with a little cream. Add grated horseradish until thick, fresh, if possible, or drained of all liquor if the bottle is used. Season with salt. Keep warm over hot water.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Healthy in the Jungle.

The United States is again damming the Chagras River. The new dam is being constructed up the river about 15 miles from Gatun Lake, formed by Gatun Dam. It is being built in what is called a jungle more than five miles outside the sanitated Canal Zone. The work is to cost several million dollars, is to continue four or five years, and will afford employment to a considerable number of laborers.

It is interesting to compare the health of the people who work on this dam with those who were digging the canal 30 years ago.

The fact that this large body of men is working in the jungle a few miles away, and that bus travel from the camp to the Zone is heavy, has increased the difficulty of keeping the people on the Zone healthy. Furthermore, a pretty good public road system in Panama for about 200 miles from the Zone has added more difficulty. People living in the interior who never went to Panama City now hop a bus and get there in a few minutes or a few hours at most. People who work in the Zone are going out these roads to swim and picnic. Some of them are building cottages at seaside resorts outside the Canal Zone.

In spite of these handicaps Dr. Siler and his staff are managing to keep the health of the people good. The death rates are lower than elsewhere when the comparison is made between groups of the same ages and the same racial distribution.

The death rates of the larger cities, occupied principally by Panamanians, is nearing the level of that of well protected cities in the States. They have low baby death rates, low typhoid and consumption rates, and very little malaria.

I WAS A SPY! - - - By MARTHE McKENNA

What Happened Thus Far.

Marthe Cnockaert McKenna, a Belgian who served as a British secret agent during the war, in previous installments told of her service as a nurse in a German military hospital—and of aiding the Allies at the same time. She caused the destruction of a German munitions train after surreptitiously reading a notation in a notebook of a German officer who flirted with her. Later she aided a Scotch soldier and an Englishman, wounded prisoners, to escape. She discovers a German officer, billeted at her father's cafe, is a German espionage agent. Disguised as a German soldier, she visits her uncle. Nearby two German soldiers are stationed as "weather observers." She slugs one of the men in their hut in the woods and talks to an enemy spy over the telephone, telling him a German flier will contact him behind the Allies' lines, thus laying a trap for him. Returning home, she takes a trip to Brussels with a German colonel.

THE shops were a great disappointment. "It is regrettable, mademoiselle, but we are unable to renew anything. Our stock is being gradually decreased, and where we are going to get fresh stock from, only the good Lord can say." The prices asked took my breath away. The half-blue painted shop windows wore a thin look, for dummy show was everywhere. I nearly wept. I thougnt I would take a look at the old Grand Place. It was a spot that had always a restful appeal to me. Its noble and towering architecture would drive away my fit of blues.

The Colonel had returned, and we had just sat down to lunch when I was aware of the noise of distant cheers, which gradually swelled closer, till I could distinguish that they came from Belgian throats; the tramcars passing the hotel seemed to clang their bells with a louder, more insistent warning, and the commotion outside grew in volume. Springing to our feet we hurried into the entrance lobby. The door was packed with the guests all straining their necks upwards. I gradually pushed my way through, and there a sight met my eyes which thrilled me through and through.

An enormous toy balloon was floating full and unfettered 200 feet above us. It was bedecked in Belgium's national colors, the envelope painted with the tricolor of France and Union Jack of Britain. Long streamers flew proundly from the sides; "Vive la Belgique," "Vive les Allies," embossed thereon. It sailed majestically along in the faint July breeze. I heard the sharp crack, crack, of rifles. The military authorities had given orders for the offending emblem to be destroyed. At each crack the tumult swelled the louder, until a final crack and the envelope was no more. The muttering roar grew fainter and fainter, but Brussels had celebrated its Independence Day!

In the evening my gallant entertainer conducted me to a motor car. The car pulled up at the entrance to an imposing private residence, set in its own grounds amid trees and shrubs. Several motor cars were parked in the grounds. A ring at the doorbell, a muttered conversation, and we were allowed to enter.

Strains of soft dance music greeted us as I let the attendant take my cloak. A bowing waiter led us to an alcove, and champagne was served to us. The hidden orchestra broke into a lively dance tune. Almost without exception the officers wore that German class mark, a horrid gash down the side of the face received in some fencing brawl.

As the night passed into morning, the company became madly uproarious, singing in uncertain chorus, shouting and embracing.

Three days passed at the hotel while the Colonel entertained me in the intervals of arduous duty. Had he not been an enemy officer he would have seemed a very pleasant companion. He was courteous, and honestly tried to do all he could to please me. I knew that I greatly attracted him, but beyond caressing my arm or my hand, and presenting me with flowers and small presents, he had paid me none of the attentions I had expected from his manner in Roulers.

Nor had he once visited my room.

Then on the next morning, I returned to my room in the hotel, after I had been shopping, to see the door standing half-open. At first I thought it was the servant who was late in cleaning out the room, but when I pushed the door wide, a German soldier was standing with his back to me gazing out of the open window. He had just placed two strange suitcases on the ground beside the bed. Then he touched his military cap, and smirkng faintly walked out without a word. I knew what this meant. There could be no mistake in the rooms, for the Colonel's initials were on the suitcases. I sat down upon the edge of the bed, aghast. In my silly optimism I had begun to think I might learn what I wanted without having to go to such an extreme. I felt horribly lonely and frightened.

In the lounge the Colonel left the palm-shaded alcove where he had been sitting and approached me with his well-bred smile. Bowing, he kissed my hand and conducted me back to his alcove, after ordering further drinks. He was suave and his talk was of trivialities. He made not the slightest hint about the suitcases in my bedroom. For the first time since I had arrived in Brussels I began to worry seriously as to where was that other agent whom I had requested should if possible keep me secret company. I had received no sign and had no idea where to look. So far I had got nothing out of my Colonel, and while he talked I was thinking to myself that I wanted the company of a friend very much.

Asks to Hear Concert.

As my eye wandered 'round the busy lounge an announcement of a Command Concert at the Opera House for that night, suspended from a pillar, caught my attention. I asked the Colonel to take me.

"Certainly, mein Fraulein," he smiled. "It is a good suggestion." Then he stroked up his moustache and gazed naively at the ceiling. "Music will be a fitting prelude to other delights," he continued. "Incidentally tonight at the opera is a great gala night, for the All Highest will be present."

Back once more in the hotel we drank coffee and brandy in the lounge. My host leaned across the table. As he lit a match for his cigar his hand trembled.

"Come, little one," suggested the Colonel rising a trifle unsteadily. "You are perhaps tired. We will go to our room."

Upstairs he took me in his arms. "In a little while I shall return," he told me, looking toward my nightdress which was laid out on the peacock-blue eiderdown, and he went out with a smile, gently closing the door behind him.

A little balcony lay outside my window and, opening it, I stepped through. The soft night wind ruffled my hair and seemed to give confidence to my burning senses. Suddenly a figure appeared upon the balcony next to mine. It was a man and he made a warning gesture with his hand. Only a few yards separated us. He slipped over the narrow space, gripped my rail, and in a moment we were standing peering into each other's faces.

I caught his hand and drew him into the light of the bedroom. It was the German lieutenant who had winked at me in the lounge, except that now he was clad in a black and scarlet brocaded dressing-gown beneath which I caught a glimpse of blue silk pyjamas. He grinned and smoothed crisp touseled hair. Then he lifted the lapel of his dressing gown, showed me two diagonally placed safety-pins nestling there, and laughed.

"Good evening," he murmured. "I am an Englishman. I am on the secret intelligence in Brussels. There are several of us here. I daresay you were surprised to see me in a German uniform, but personally I was fitted into this job by our war office before the war got started. We received warning of the important job you were on, and I was detailed to shadow you."

"I wish I could help you," he said.

"You couldn't," I assured him. "It would only throw suspicion on both of us if you try to help me actively. I must rely on myself tonight. But here is where you can help. Suppose that I do manage to ascertain the information I want within time to make use of it, I intend to get back to Roulers immediately, as I can transmit the warning quicker direct over the frontier and thence by the regular channel to the air authorities near the line than you would be able to do from here."

"I understand," he rejoined, and then looked hard at the Colonel's two suitcases which still stood untouched where the soldier had placed them by the bed. "Do those cases belong to your precious Colonel?" he inquired.

"Yes."

"Have you searched them for papers?"

"Not yet." He was down on his knees in a moment.

"Nothing of much value," he grinned, removing one scarlet slipper and stuffing them inside. "But better than nothing, all the same."

He had one leg poised in the air as he replaced the slipper, when there sounded a rap on the door.

Reaching the Best Contract.

Hands in which one member of a partnership is void of the suit by the other present unusual difficulties in handling. Usually when both players have long and strong major suits the question of the final contract is determined solely on the basis of which of the players first tires of attempting to outbid his partner. The fact that a player has, for instance, long spades to the five top honors and is void of hearts, bid by his partner, who may have a like holding in that suit, does not promise a happy outcome for the hand. The absence of a suit generally condemns the play of the hand at notrump, but situations do arise in which notrump may be the best eventual contract, as demonstrated by Dr. Bartelmus, of Czechoslovakia, in the following unusual hand:

1—In view of the fact that North is void of his partner's suit and his hand contains only 3 honor-tricks, although the heart suit is very strong, this Forcing Takeout is questionable.

2—East, not vulnerable, figures on a possible loss of 7 tricks, partially offset by the honor holding.

3—Disclosing rebiddable strength in spades.

4—A daring bid but, after all, North reasons that there must be some re-entry to South's hand in view of the fact that he opened the bidding and has rebid. If his spades are solid there may be a Slam.

5—The conventional response, probably reluctantly given, but showing the remaining two Aces.

6—North, Dr. Bartelmus, decides to gamble on the chance of finding his partner's spade suit absolutely solid, and thus makes a daring bid of seven notrump.

So far as the play is concerned, it will be noticed that there is a plenitude of tricks. Both hearts and spades are solid and the two minor Aces afford means of ingress to the respective hands. Of course, the reader will note that a Slam contract, or even a game contract, in either hearts of spades is impossible of fulfillment as East and West may capture six tricks before the Declarer secures the lead. However happy the result, I am afraid that the bidding was slightly too unconventional to appeal to my conservative mind. I give it merely as an example of what may happen with freak holdings.

What Today Means

"TAURUS."

If May 9 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 a. m. until noon, from 1 to 3 p. m. and from 6 to 8 p. m. The danger periods are from 7 to 9 a. m., from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 9 to 11 p. m.

This date promises to prove a very satisfactory one for you in the way of starting things which ultimately may bring gratifying results. It is most auspicious for your social as well as business activities. It may be advisable to exercise care when entering or leaving rooms. Avoid passing under high or elevated objects, such as scaffolds and ladders during the day.

The child born on May 9, upon entering its teens, may cause a little concern by the enthusiastic outbreaks of "puppy love" it will indulge in.

The woman born on May 9 is very rational in all her acts, and can be relied upon to use good judgment both in business as well as social affairs. If born on this date, you are inclined to be just a little bit too conservative in your ideas regarding the manners and habits of the younger generation.

The man born on May 9 will find life far more pleasant if he avoids being too great a stickler for formality. If born on this date try to realize that ceremonious precision in family and social life passed out when jazz, crooners and radios came in.

Wardrobe Carried in a Brief Case Solves the Problem of Looking Chic at 5 P. M.

Formula Is Told for Keeping Engagements After Busy Day

Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillan, Civil Service Commissioner, Divulges Secret of Her Method for Reconciling Official and Social Duties.

How to issue forth at 5 o'clock after a strenuous and tiring day at the office, looking leisurely, lovely and smartly dressed, as any lady should when she goes out to cocktails, is a tough problem and one faced by women in high official positions.

This is the third in a series of six articles about clothes and their relation to "women who do things."

By Irene Hasbrook.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONER was delighted.

"I'm glad you think it's a good idea. It works beautifully, really it does."

Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, a lady with gusto in public speaking and a "passion for evening clothes," launched into an enthusiastic description of her program for clothes preparedness.

Elements of the "good idea" became apparent as she indicated a brief case lying on one corner of her large desk. Ostensibly it had never carried anything but important papers.

"I brought the ermine collar down in that." She waved at the brief case. "The white gloves, a nice new pair, were here. I always keep several pairs in the office in that sort of wardrobe-ish thing over there. The string of beads came down in the brief case. I wore a black dress that day, the kind that's simple and quite suitable for the office, but still it is a very nice dress."

"The time came for me to leave for the cocktail party and with the help of the contents of the brief case I was turned out in 20 minutes looking as though I'd just come fresh from home."

How the Plan Works.

The secretary gazed adoringly across the big office at her animated employer, and murmured, "You certainly did, Mrs. McMillin. You looked lovely."

This is how one of the best-dressed women in official circles did it.

The black dress is one of those throat-muffling affairs that can be worn up or down. She unfastened one button and achieved a lower neckline. Put on a string of beads. Slipped out of her tailored oxfords into a higher-heeled pair of shoes that had been reposing in the "wardrobe-ish looking thing." Adjusted her smart black hat. Fastened the ermine collar onto the fur jacket, picked up the spotless gloves and went gayly to her afternoon party where nobody believed she'd come straight from work, she looked so grand.

She admits it took a little time to evolve this system, which though simple on the surface, is elaborately and carefully worked out. The difficult part was not in dressing suitably for the office but in dressing for the dual role of executive and society woman.

She speaks of clothes with relish—it's fun to talk with her about them for that reason and because she's an expert on good attire. She gives dress its due with a dash of extra affection thrown in. There is none of the reticence displayed by certain ladies high up in Government positions, whose cool-voiced secretaries said their employers would speak of their work but not of their clothes.

No Diffidence Here.

The Director of the United States Mint is not afflicted with this diffidence. Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross feels quite strongly about clothes, particularly on the too-tailored type. She can't understand, she says, why women just because they are in Government business or professions should feel they are being less conspicuous by wearing this kind of thing. Far from being unobtrusive they are declaiming, in effect, "look at me—I don't need feminine blandishments to help me in my work—I am on an equality basis with men." Which makes anyone stand out from the crowd, and not too favorably.

"Wear simple things," advises Mrs. Ross. "Things in good taste. And then if you pick dresses that express your personality, you can't go wrong. Clothes are to a person as a frame to a picture—that's a good thing to remember."

Dr. Louise Stanley should know about such things. She's head of the Home Economics Bureau, Department of Agriculture. She advocates simplicity and carries it out personally in the street dresses she wears to the office.

Mrs. Ellen Woodward, of the dark, auburn hair and clear white skin, directs the course of Federal relief administration for women, dressed in dark brown, tan or black. She leaves prints for other people and devotes herself to solid colors.

A concluding note about the exuberant Mrs. McMillin. She proclaims the busy woman should buy all her clothes at one shop if possible. That's one of the major ingredients in her recipe for smartness.

Read in tomorrow's Post what the job-hunting secretary has to say about clothes and how it jibes with the remarks of the employment agency head.

Harris & Ewing.

YOU SEE BEFORE you a charming lady, a competent executive, and an authority. Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin leaves the office in which you see her pictured looking even smarter than when she arrives.

Where Is the Love of Yesteryear?

By Katherine Smith.

It may be a letter, it may be a card,
A bit of a wedding cake, dusty and hard,

A message that says, "to remember me by"—
Here are the tokens "reminding me of"—
But what has become of the generous love?

Workers Will Turn Students For 8 Weeks

Interested in Economics Chiefly, Says Worker's School Director.

NEXT month hundreds of American industrial workers will enter a new world.

They will leave factories and tenements behind and depart for an eight weeks course at one of the five affiliated workers' schools conducted yearly at leading American colleges.

"This short course often changes both the life of the chosen student and those of her fellow workers," Miss Hilda Smith said yesterday. Miss Smith, who has directed the Bryn Mawr School since its establishment in 1921, is a specialist in workers' education in the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Intense interest is being evidenced in the workers' schools at this time as a result of the Bryn Mawr Club's efforts to raise money to send a Washington worker to that school this summer. The money is being secured principally through the sale of "Books and Things" now being held at 1622 H street northwest.

The students are chiefly interested in economic questions, Miss Smith explained.

"They want to know what is happening, why it is happening, and what they can do about it," she said. "Our problem is to present the social and economic sciences to people with mature minds, but with limited vocabularies and education.

After years of trial the plan for teaching found most effective is to start with discussion of the worker's own experiences in industry, relating that experience to the theories of economics, and showing this knowledge can be applied in a practical fashion.

These students are having a powerful influence in the industrial communities to which they return, according to Miss Smith.

"They start classes in the things they have studied, join libraries, take an active part in legislation, and are active leaders in the trade union movement."

But the obstacles, Miss Smith asserts, are many.

"We catch it from all sides," she said. "The old time employers think it makes workers discontented to be educated. The radicals think we should not employ college professors as they are in accord with the capitalists."

"WE CATCH IT on all sides," says Miss Hilda Smith, above, specialist in educating the industrial worker. Old-time employers think education of the worker makes for discontent. The radicals associate professors with capitalists.

Modern Woman Held Dull; The Machine Age Did It

Mrs. Niles, Explorer, Says Women Used to Have Housekeeping for Career, but That's Gone and Now They're Unhappy.

By Elenore Kellogg.

NEW YORK, May 8 (AP).—The machine age robbed women of most of their housekeeping duties and has made them not only unhappy but also dull, in the opinion of Blair Niles, explorer and writer.

Mrs. Niles, a black-eyed Virginian who has lived among head-hunters and Indians in Borneo and Latin-America, believes primitive women are happier, calmer and more interesting than many of their civilized sisters, she said today.

"I grew up on a great plantation run by my grandmother and then my mother," she related. "They did everything for themselves—making soap, overseeing the milking of cows and making butter, putting up fruit and vegetables. An earlier generation had even done its own weaving.

"Because there weren't any schools, they brought up their own children and taught them until they were old enough to go to boarding school. They had to be tremendously versatile people — it would be Latin one minute and pickles the next.

"During one season they were preparing for the next. These women were happy and tremendously interesting because they had a big job. They had no time for frustrations, inhibitions or nerves."

Mrs. Niles looked around the cool, high-ceilinged room which she and her architect husband have decorated in bright-colored Spanish style.

"The average city woman who goes to the movies in the afternoon," she continued, "and buys ham and bread at the delicatessen. She has no career. Her housekeeping is no career any more, and she hasn't any other.

"This makes her feel dull, and seem dull to other people. She's discontented, and I don't wonder."

Admitting that all women could not return to their grandmother's day and run plantations, Mrs. Niles pointed out what they could do to make housekeeping, and themselves, "tremendously interesting."

"There's lots of child psychology to study now," she said. "They might interest themselves in interior decorating and put some artistic feeling into their homes. They can get interested in doing all sorts of things about food, because the stuff you buy is nothing like as good as what you make yourself."

Where Juleps Flowed.

GENEVA DUNHAM is in town again after a long absence, most of which was spent on her ranch out West.

* * * *

In the days of the Washington Opera Company, Mrs. Dunham's apartment, which was in the same building and the floor above the Sol Blooms' was frequently the scene of gay after-the-opera parties. There was one huge silver bowl always filled with fresh mint and cracked ice, while the frost on the bowl showed that old Kentucky special, mint julep, was in the making.

* * * *

Now the furniture of the charming apartment is in storage and it is likely Mrs. Dunham will build a house down in Kentucky.

Disparagement of Tenors.

A CERTAIN charming star of operetta is in town. One of her best beaus asked her all about her latest production.

* * * *

"You certainly were the life of that last operetta," he said. "I couldn't see that the tenor did anything but sing."

* * * *

"My dear John," responded the lady with emphasis, "I've sung in operettas quite a few years now and I've yet to find a tenor who can do anything besides sing."

Of "Shanghai Gesture" Fame.

FLORENCE REED, the deep-voiced lady of "Shanghai Gesture" fame, came to town for the Actors' Benefit. Back-stage, just before she joined Elsie Ferguson and Mr. Frohman to sit "out front" for a while, she mentioned this is her first week as leading lady in Baltimore's summer stock company.

* * * *

"They're reviving my play, 'The Thoroughbred,' for the opening week," said Miss Reed. "Isn't that clever—the season being on at Pimlico right now?"

* * * *

Miss Reed carries pictures and other knick-knacks with her when she travels, even for a week. The last time she was in Washington, stopping at the Wardman Park Hotel, she had her rooms looking more her own than people who had lived there for months. There's a certain colonel who still talks about the enchanting picture Miss Reed made when she had some friends up to tea one day, and wore some lipstick-red pajamas with chartreuse trousers.

Perky Sub-Deb Models Shown

New York, May 8 (AP).—Subdebs have a pleasant summer in prospect as far as clothes are concerned. Junior fashions being shown here are both attractive and wearable.

One-piece dresses with jackets are the staple, but they range from tweed and crepe swagger suits to a frivolous little business of tucked net that for Miss Junior's mama would be called a cocktail suit.

Bright prints that wash, in tie silk patterns, are good for daytime. So are swagger suits of smooth crepes or dull ribbed sheers in colors for street wear.

For warmer weather, suits of pastel linen, plaid or checked seersucker and tweedy cottons are being shown.

Expert Speller Receives Honors And That's All

Mrs. Clark Says Talents Wasted Because of Her Handwriting.

MOVIE contracts, fan mail and vast popularity are the traditional rewards of all champions—whether egg-eaters or ocean-flyers.

But Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark is disconsolate because her own particular championship will never get her anywhere. Mrs. Clark, wife of Senator Clark, of Missouri, recently defeated all contestants in the spelling match conducted by the Washington Newspaper Woman's Club. She was awarded a dictionary.

"But what good does it do me to know how to spell when my handwriting is so bad no one can tell if I spell words correctly?" she asked plaintively yesterday.

Although she is a Vassar graduate Mrs. Clark does not attribute her prowess as a speller to the famed college. It was at her mother's knee she learned to spell the hard ones.

"My mother was always a champion speller," she said, "and she was anxious that I not disgrace her For that reason she made me study harder on my spelling than any other subject."

However, there was one thing lacking in Mrs. Clark's training as a speller. She used to write her lesson, and consequently spelling matches still make her nervous.

"I can sympathize with the people whose tongues tripped them on words they knew," she said. "They were like me, they got stage fright. I was pretty badly frightened at first myself, but I got over it."

While diligent study may help a person become a good speller, Mrs. Clark firmly believes champions are born, not made.

"I have always had a sort of intuitive knowledge of the correct way to spell words," she confided, "but this works better when I write them than when I spell them aloud. If I get bewildered when spelling I can always close my eyes, imagine how the word looks on paper and then spell it."

Finland Seen as Forcing Women Out of Public Life

Woman Parliament Member, Miss Kyllikki Pohjola, Relates How Unmarried Women Workers in Government Have Suffered Pay Cut.

THE HITLER-MUSSOLINI wave that swept German and Italian women out of public life is now lapping on the shores of Finland, long regarded as one of the most liberal countries in the world in its attitude toward women's rights. Already the salaries of unmarried Finnish government workers have been cut 10 per cent; most of those unmarried workers are women.

This is only the first step in an attempt to drive women back into the home, believes Miss Kyllikki Pohjola, member of Finland's Parliament. Accompanied by Miss Nina Strandberg, president of the Finnish Auxiliary of the International Suffrage Alliance, she is spending a few days in Washington.

Doesn't Favor Them.

"The present cabinet is certainly not in favor of women," declared Miss Pohjola yesterday afternoon in the garden of the headquarters of National Woman's Party, 144 B street northeast. "And the cabinet's sentiment is shared by a large number of Parliament members. Recently a bill was introduced to prohibit husbands and wives from working for the government."

Miss Pohjola took a firm stand against the bill.

"I told the members of Parliament such a law would result in immorality. Women would live outside the conventions if marriage meant the loss of their jobs."

Unlike Germany, Finland is doing nothing to encourage marriage, as Miss Pohjola sees it. When the unmarried women government workers suffered a 10 per cent cut it was still to their economic advantage to remain single.

"As soon as they marry their income is added to their husbands' when the tax assessor comes 'round. This puts their taxes in a higher bracket."

"But we hope women in private business will be able to continue in their work," put in Miss Strandberg. "So far there has been no discrimination against them. I believe we have more women filling jobs in Finland than you have in America."

Finland weathered the recent world-wide economic crisis perhaps better than any other country, according to the visitors.

"Undoubtedly because we are an agricultural nation," said Miss Pohjola, "Every family has enough to live on. There are no extremely poor people."

No Rich People.

"Neither are there any rich ones," added Miss Strandberg. "Bathtubs we have, yes. But velvet dresses, electric refrigerators, automobiles—they are great luxuries."

Finland was surprised when the United States praised it for meeting promptly its war debt installments.

"We didn't realize we were doing anything so wonderful," said Miss Pohjola. "We thought we were doing only what all creditors should do. But now we're like spoiled children. Every time we meet an installment we expect to be praised."

She smiled good-naturedly.

Kyllikki Pohjola is one of the 14 women serving in Finland's Parliament. Three years ago she was asked to be a candidate but refused. At first she refused to run for her present term.

"But the men I had known in France—I did war work—came and asked me to run. I couldn't bear to refuse them. So I became a candidate."

"And it was the men who elected her," declared Miss Strandberg.

Soon the two women will return to their homeland. And when they get there, women throughout Finland will probably breathe a little easier; they know Miss Pohjola and Miss Strandberg will do all they can to retain the rights women have had for many years.

"We formed the Finnish Auxiliary of the International Suffrage Alliance not to gain suffrage but to keep it," said Miss Strandberg.

"And we shall try to defeat all legislation that will discourage marriage and the establishing of homes," declared Miss Pohjola.

Hameln's Piper Recalled Again

Hameln, Germany, May 8 (AP).—"Into the streets he piped advancing, and step by step they followed dancing." In these words did Robert Browning describe the fatal spell the Pied Piper of Hameln cast upon the children of that ancient town when he lured them away.

To children of other lands the story of the Pied Piper is merely a fascinating legend, but in Hameln, beginning May 20, there will be a grand homecoming to commemorate the 650th anniversary of the Piper.

J. C. Royle, 55, Writer, Is Dead Of Pneumonia

Funeral to Be Tomorrow for Former A. P. Correspondent.

Jonathan Cosby Royle, 55, newspaperman and prominent business magazine writer, died early yesterday morning of pneumonia after a three-day illness at Providence Hospital.

Mr. Royle, widely known as "Jack" Royle, had been a resident of this city, only since 1929, when he came here to become news editor of the United States News and later to found the Business News Service, of which he was the head.

He was born in 1878 in Salt Lake City, the son of a prominent lawyer, and was graduated in 1899 from Princeton University. Starting as a mining engineer, he soon abandoned that profession for newspaper work. He held his first position in Salt Lake City, then went to San Francisco and Denver, finally to join the Associated Press.

As a correspondent of the Associated Press in Mexico City during the World War, before America's participation, he was expelled by the Mexican government because he discovered—and filed—a story in which Mexico and Germany were linked in a spy system.

He was then made night manager of the Associated Press in Chicago, but left in 1920 to become manager of the New York offices of the Consolidated Press Association. Later, he specialized on business news until he came to Washington.

Mr. Royle is survived by his widow, Grace Wall Royle; two brothers, Edwin M. Royle and Dr Sinclair K. Royle, of New York, and one sister, Mrs. Martha Royle Palmer, of San Francisco. He was a member of the National Press Club and the Players Club of New York.

The funeral will be held at 4 p. m. tomorrow at Lee's undertaking establishment. Burial will take place in Rock Creek Cemetery.

France Again Raises American Apple Quota

Paris, May 8 (AP).—A 1,000-ton increase in the American apple quota for the three months ended June 30 was promised today to French importers who are trying, however, to get an additional 1,500 tons.

The increase, the second within a fortnight, will bring the original 5,000-ton allotment to a total of 8,400 tons. It had not been officially announced tonight. French importers declared the projected hike is insufficient to permit orders already placed in the United States to enter France.

Radio Waves and Ripples

SUPER confident people . . . these announcers. Cataclysms phase them not. Studio officials rip their collars when artists fail to show up on time . . . but such lads as that Bob Trout must have a deep, deep faith in the divine Providence that allows a program to click when everybody else has thrown up the sponge.

Bob handled Columbia's broadcast Tuesday night as a whole stageful of temperament trooped in twos and threes up to WJSV's studio when current radio stars appearing at Loew's Fox went on the air. Even hard-boiled persons like Earl Merryman, control man, had to admit that portions of the broadcast were actually great stuff.

Hunched over the controls, Earl made wry faces while others clapped . . . but he, too, actually looked pleased when Gypsy Nina and Tito Guizar did a duet with guitar and accordion . . . which idea went over with Lou Brown. He's going to have them repeat it the rest of the week on their stage appearances.

But what really made that program was Phil Cook and his slightly goofy comments. Sauntering through a maze of pianos, admirers and wandering announcers, Phil managed to reach the mike just in time and it was his happy nonsense that really filled the gaps. Peggy Keenan and Sandra Phillips did masterly pounding on the keys for Tony Wons . . . whose homely philosophy wasn't written for studio atmosphere . . . and George Hall kicked his heels when his very swell protege, Loretta Lee, perked her nose an inch from the mike. She has smoothness and warmth . . . that girl.

JEANIE LANG

describes her own brand of singing as "squeaking" during her broadcasts over a Columbia network each Friday at 8:30 p. m. Would Jeanie describe Loretta Lee's singing as "steaming?" . . . Maybe. They're both prepared for summer programs . . . especially the Lang lassie in that sport shirt.

Warren Sweeney, one of WJSV's more promising lads, after watching the broadcast, announces that he has plenty of material for his Sunday noon spot. Sweeney also does sonatas in his off moments.

* * * *

SINCE Alexander Woollcott left off gasping his frantic but none the less spicy comments on Broadway's gurgling stream . . . his lonely spot at the mike is now warmed by Thurber James, that naughty cynical lad who is somewhat fed up on life.

When Thurber was first coaxed to the mike things strange and supernatural happened and he found himself unwittingly and unwillingly in the nether regions of the building where even the janitor wouldn't believe he was a radio artist. His thoughts while strolling the last mile before being throttled by the mike are set down this week in that New Yorker mag.

It really isn't such a fearful slaughter as he makes out . . . but he took it philosophically when it turned out to be only a rehearsal anyway.

"The notion that writers of short, light pieces are gay of heart and carefree is curiously untrue," says Thurber. "Authors of such pieces have, nobody knows why, a genius for getting into minor difficulties; they walk into the wrong apartments, they drink furniture polish for stomach bitters, they drive cars into prize tulip beds . . . to call such persons 'humorists,' a loose-fitting and ugly word, is to miss the nature of their dilemma and the dilemma of their nature," he bemoans.

PERMISSION to plant microphones on the floor of the House is not often given. But if and when the present session calls it a day . . . which depends something on which is hotter, the weather or the debating . . . N. B. C. intends to broadcast the last precious hours so you may hear members of Congress reluctantly bidding adieu to Speaker Rainey.

Microphones will stand directly in front of the Speaker's rostrum near the reading clerk in the "well" of the House . . . but announcers must remain in the record room just off the House chamber under the wily supervision of guards.

WJSV—Claudette Colbert, film star, interviewed by Louella Parsons, 12:15 p. m.; Gordon, Dave and Bunny, catchy arrangements of current hits, 4:45 p. m.; Nino Martini, singing "Le Reve" from Massenet's "Manon," "Sylvia," by Speaks; and a new setting of "Ramona", 8 p. m.; "Estrellita", featured by Albert Spalding, violinist, 9:30 p. m.

Whitecaps.

WRC—Excerpts from "Sally," "The Waltz Dream," "Twenty Million Sweethearts," "The Duchess of Danzig" during Two Seats in the Balcony program with Fred Hufsmith, tenor; Donald Beltz, baritone; Ivy Scott and Carol Deis, sopranos, and Celia Branz, contralto, 1 p. m.; Armchair Quartet rendering "Honey Dat I Love So Well," "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," and "De Sandman," 4:45 p. m.; Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, addressing American Judicature Society, 9:30 p. m.

WMAL—"Taxi," dramatc sketch with Max Baer, 6:45 p. m.; concluding installment of "Eyes Have They," murder mystery, Crime Club, 7 p. m.; Clive Brook, screen star, appearing in "Three Cornered Moon," 8:30 p. m.; "The Frazier-Lemke Bill," Representative Magnus Johnson, speaking, 10:30 p. m.

Ripples.

YOU will cease fingering your dial if it happens to catch anyone of the luminaries or events promised for today . . . Claudette Colbert, fr'instance . . . she may tell why hiking it cross-country with Clark Gable tickled her more than bathing in Roman soap suds, Cleopatra fashion . . . she'll be interviewed at 12:15 p. m. over WABC. Then there's as fine a trio of actors as ever curled a lip or raised an eyebrow . . . Clive Brook, Leslie Howard and Roland Young, of course. Brook, whose haughty asceticism, you admired in "Cavalcade," "Sherlock Holmes," et al., will do the lead in a mike version of Michael Arlen's "Three Cornered Moon" . . . N. B. C. brings him to you at 8:30 p. m. over WMAL. No one ever questioned the eminent statesmanship of Newton D. Baker, the dapper little former Secretary of War, who speaks today at 9:30 p. m. over WRC from the Mayflower Hotel during a session of the American Judicature Society. The former Secretary is so short that his feet dangle from the chair he sits in. It was the privilege of this department to interview tomorrow's chief speaker, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes . . . we have have never felt as highly honored or been in a greater presence. Justice Hughes addresses the American Law Institute tomorrow at 10 a. m. over WABC.

Fire Alarm Box Used By Boy to Mail Letter

Denver, May 8 (AP).—Because he thought it was "prettier," Wayne Russell, 7, a ranch lad visiting friends here, selected a red box instead of a green one when he was sent to mail a letter.

A few minutes later, a deputy fire chief and members of six companies explanied the difference in the boxes to Wayne.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

The Cook Threatens to Quit

"Rabbits, rabbits, rabbits," said Bettie Bear, as she came out of her kitchen, and stood in the door to the porch where Blackie and the boys were sitting smoking. "There is a rabbit foot on every shelf in this house; there is rabbit fur all over my kitchen and all over the yard; I am all the time scratching rabbit fur out of my eyelashes, and I'm scraping it off my tongue. Rabbit stewed, fried rabbit, baked rabbit, and rabbits lying on the floor with their skins still on, and their cold eyes staring at me just 'ike they thought I had killed them. I can't think about anything but rabbits and I can't dream about anything but rabbits.

"Last night I woke myself up hopping around on the floor nibbling at nothing, but thinking I was don't get out of here and get something but rabbits to eat, you had better be looking over the country for another cook.

"Not another hair of rabbit do I cook till I have forgotten how they taste." And Bettie swished her apron up and down, and went to the kitchen.

Maybe you couldn't have knocked that crowd down with a feather, but you wouldn't have needed an ax. Never before had anybody except Blackie seen her in such a temper, and they were too surprised to biting young onions. I'm tired of rabbits and rabbit fur. I'm tired of picking the fur out of my eyes and ears and nose, and I'm tired of eating rabbits, and if some of you speak. They just sat there and looked at Blackie wondering what he would do. Blackie took two or three long puffs at his big pipe, and then he said:

"Well, it looks like we will have to go to the lake for a few of our own meals. There used to be plenty of meat in there, and some of it even roasted on the logs sometimes. Maybe we can sweeten Bettie's mind a bit if we catch a few fish about as big as the little minnow that kicked Uncle Joe's hat off, that day, so we will try our luck out yonder tomorrow. Come to think of it, I am a bit tired of rabbit meat myself."

The rest of the day was spent in hunting up old hooks and lines, and digging bait, and cutting poles. If you could guess anything by the fixing the crowd did for next day's fishing, you would guess that enough fish would come out of the water to make Bettie as tired of cooking and eating fish as she was of rabbit.

But she was a lot pleased to see them all at work for a change of meat, so she gave them about the best supper of rabbit stewed with onions and potatoes that she had cooked since the crowd came up from the Creek. And Jay Bird would tell you that the stories that were told around the supper table about the courting days of Grandpa and Grandma would have made anybody believe that nobody at the table was unhappy.

Lawyer Asks Coblentz Bill Be Quashed

Three Motions Are Filed in Baltimore Against Indictment.

Banker Seeks to Avoid Trial in Collapse of Chain.

Baltimore, May 8 (Spl.).—Seeking to avoid another trial for former State Senator Emory L. Coblentz, Frederick (Md.) banker accused in connection with the collapse of the Central Trust Co. of Maryland two years ago, his attorney today filed three motions to quash the indictment.

One motion was a plea in abatement, another was a demurrer to the indictment, and the third was a plea of res adjudicata—that to proceed with the case would serve to place the defendant in double jeopardy.

Judge George A. Solter, presiding at the trial, held the motions under advisement.

Meanwhile, Coblentz will not be arraigned for pleading until the court has ruled on the law motions. The case was moved to Baltimore from Ellicott City on a change of venue.

Coblentz was indicted in Howard County in August, 1933, on charges of improper corporate claims in connection with the condition of Central Trust Co., particularly its branch in Ellicott City. The bank chain of which the Central Trust was the head collapsed several years ago, with considerable loss to depositors throughout Western Maryland.

Coblentz was tried in July, 1932, in Cumberland on charges of accepting deposits when he knew the chain was insolvent. He was found guilty and sentenced to 18 months in the Maryland House of Correction. The Court of Appeals reversed this conviction and last June Coblentz went on trial at Frederick for a second time on similar charges. Two judges of the Frederick Court found him not guilty.

His indictment in Howard County followed, resulting in the change of venue to Baltimore. In his law motions today, Leo Weinberg, attorney for Senator Coblentz, declared the Howard County indictment was faulty and should be thrown out; and that Senator Coblentz's previous acquittal at Frederick should bar a further prosecution on the same charges in Maryland.

2,000 Attend Impressive Memorial Services For Father Andrew White at St. Marys City

Scenes at the colorful open-air Maryland tercentenary memorial mass held yesterday at the Father Andrew White Memorial Altar which overlooks old St. Marys River in Maryland, where the Ark and Dove rode at anchor 300 years ago. Above, the Rev. Richard B. Washington, celebrant of the mass, and direct descendant of George Washington's brother, Lawrence Washington, is shown at the altar, being assisted by the Rev. H. McKenna, S. J., and St. Marys County altar boys.

River Shrine to Jesuit Missionary Scene of Ceremonies.

Tributes Paid Memory of One of Founders of Maryland.

By Marion Butler.

St. Marys City, Md., May 8.—The river shrine to Father Andrew White, Jesuit missionary who was one of Maryland's founders and first historian, was the scene of simple, but impressive tercentenary commemoration exercises today that were attended by 2,000 Marylanders.

Open air mass was celebrated on the circular altar forming the shrine by the Rev. Richard B. Washington, direct descendant of Lawrence Washington, George Washington's brother. The colorful vestments of the Catholic Church, an altar banked with yellow flowers, and blue St. Marys River in the background added to the beauty of the scene.

Father Washington was assisted in the service by the Rev. H. McKenna, S. J., of The Ridge, Md., and four St. Marys County altar boys.

Three hundred white-garbed parochial and high school children of St. Marys County sang the Mass of the Angels. Some of them were descendants of the Maryland pioneers who assisted Father White at mass in the historic Indian tepee which served as the first Catholic Church near this same site in 1634.

Civil Ceremonies Held.

Following mass civil ceremonies commemorating the occasion and the Maryland tercentenary year were held at noon.

William Franklin Sands, president of the Pilgrims of St. Mary's, introduced the speakers, the Rev. John La Farge, S. J., of New York, founder of the society of the Pilgrims of St. Mary's, and the Rev. Daniel Magruder, of Annapolis, president of the Ark and the Dove Society.

Father La Farge, associate editor of America, National Catholic weekly, spoke on the union of religion and progress in early Maryland.

"Today," he pointed out, "progress is flowing back to Old Maryland. The tercentennial is a new 'day star.' The lifeblood of this restoration of progress is confidence. The nourishment of that lifeblood is religion."

In conclusion, Father La Farge urged that Protestants and Catholics join today, as well their Jewish brethren, to maintain religious worship and practice as an essential element in the life of State and Nation.

Dr. Magruder spoke of coming tercentenary events and praised Maryland's famed three-century-old religious ideals.

He was followed by R. Bennett Darnall, of Baltimore, executive head of the Maryland Tercentenary Commission, who spoke on the major celebration of the tercentenary year at St. Marys City next month.

Notables Attend.

A picnic luncheon prepared by St. Marys County women, under direction of Mrs. Aubrey Gardiner, of Chaptico, closed the festivities.

Prominent among those who attended were James Sands and Aloysius King, trustees of the Pilgrims Society; the Rev. Nelson Maconomy, rector of St. Mary's Trinity Episcopal Church; the Rev. A. M. Stewart, of Rochester, N. Y., author of the recently published treatise "Life of Rene Menard," seventeenth century Jesuit missionary to the Cayuga Indians; the Rev. Joseph Knight, S. J., of Leonardtown; the Rev. H. K. Cawood, S. J., of Greenwood, and the Rev. H. Greenwell, S. J., of Baltimore.

The site of the memorial altar, located just across the river bend from the St. Marys City State House of 1676, now being restored, was a gift of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Dunbar, of St. Marys City. The altar was dedicated May 27, 1933.

School Board Reorganized.

Soviet Vessel Brings Ore; To Carry Back Steel, Sugar

Women Crew Members, as Well as Absolute Cleanliness and Equality of Personnel, Amazes Sailors in Baltimore.

Baltimore, May 8 (Spl.).—The Soviet motorship Komsomol, out of the little Black Sea port of Novorossisk, which yesterday was the first Russian vessel to tie up in the harbor here since 1917, brought a cargo of ore. She is to take back a mixed cargo of steel, machinery, automobiles and sugar. Her stay in Baltimore will be limited to about three days.

Deep sea sailors watched as tugs, puffing black smoke, warped the 8,000-ton vessel into her berth at pier 6 of the Western Maryland Railway's marine terminal at Port Covington, on the middle branch of the Patapsco River. They found plenty about the ship to interest them.

For one thing, her immaculate cleanliness is unusual for any boat, ocean-going or otherwise.

She carries two women in her crew, rated as stewardesses.

The vessel's motors are painted baby blue. The engine room is white. There is not a spot of grease or oil visible.

The mess hall is decorated with palms, like the dining salon of a passenger ship. In a small room opening into it there is a shrine to the memory of Nicolai Lenin, the Soviet leader. A miniature statue of Lenin done in black marble stands on a pedestal, and around it is draped the crimson Soviet flag. Pictures of Stalin, Karl Marx and Voroshiloff hang on the walls.

Tomorrow the ship is to be taken to the Locust Point terminals of the B. & O. Railroad for loading. Then she will go to New Orleans for sugar—and thence back to the Black Sea.

Virtually none of the crew is able to speak English, but all are uniformly polite to visitors on the vessel and make strenuous, and sometimes ludicrous, efforts to be of assistance. They could not describe the fare given the sailors, but politely showed the visitors about the galley, where the food is prepared.

Mint to Rush Maryland's Festival Coins

Treasury to Issue 25,000 Commemorative Half Dollar Pieces.

Tercentenary Pageant Is Slated June 15-16 in St. Marys City.

Baltimore, May 8 (Spl.).—Bearing plaster models of the Maryland tercentenary 50-cent piece authorized last week by Congress, Dr. Matthew Page Andrews, of the Maryland Tercentenary Commission, left today for Washington to submit the models to the United States Mint.

The coin was designed by Hans Schuler, Baltimore sculptor. It will bear on one side the Maryland coat of arms. A portrait of Cecil Calvert, second proprietary of Maryland and actual founder of the colony, will appear on the other side.

In order that they may be in circulation by the time of the tercentenary celebration at St. Marys City in June, the Mint will speed production of the coins, the Tercentenary Commission has been informed. The issue will be of 25,000 pieces. The bill authorizing the coin is awaiting President Roosevelt's signature.

Most of the half-dollars will be preserved as momentoes of Maryland's 300th aniversary, it is expected. Many others will find their way into the collections of numismatists. The Tercentenary Commission and Mint officials expect the coins will have little general circulation, as the demands of the coin collectors alone would absorb practically all.

Commission members today decided to hold a two-day pageant at St. Marys City instead of a one-day fete. The dates selected are June 15 and 16.

The pageant is to be called "St. Maries, the Mother of Maryland," and will be produced in eight episodes, with more than 1,000 persons in the cast. It will cover the first 60 years of Maryland's history. The author of the pageant, Mrs. Kathleen Read Koontz, of Washington, will come to Baltimore Thursday to confer with tercentenary officials on details.

Work on the replica of Maryland's Statehouse, about which the tercentenary festival will center, is being speeded and the building is reported nearing completion. The roof is already on, and the lawn is to be seeded this week. Trees and shrubbery will be planted next week.

The fete program calls for dedication of the Statehouse replica on June 16, to be followed by a second presentation of the tercentenary pageant, the first presentation having been given the previous day.

Uncensored Lines Create Sensation at Two Performances.

Charlottesville, Va., May 8 (Spl.). The Virginia Players of the University of Virginia created a mild sensation last night and tonight by their presentation of "The Front Page" with uncensored dialogue.

The reporters' parts were efficiently handled by Francis Johnson, of Merrick, Long Island; George Snyder, of Norfolk, Va.; Sigmund Beck, of Far Rockaway, N. Y.; Ivy Lewis, of University; Roger McGrath, of Elmira, N. Y.; Murray Brown, of Richmond, and Albert Johnson, of Merrick, Long Island.

Mrs. Fleming To Again Head Kenmore Body

Betty Washington Shrine Debt Now Reduced to $13,200.

Fredericksburg, Va., May 8 (Spl.). More than 50 State regents and officials of the Kenmore Association gathered today in the garden of Kenmore, historic estate of George Washington's only sister, Betty, and her husband, Col. Fielding H. Lewis, to hold the association's annual spring meeting.

On the 185th anniversary of the wedding of the Revolutionary munitions manufacturer and George Washington's only sister, these women gathered on the lawn before the mansion erected by Col. Lewis for his bride and made plans to carry on the preservation and advertisement of the noted historic shrine.

All officers of the association were reelected for next year. Mrs. Vivian Minor Fleming, 74-year-old president of the organization, who first conceived the movement to preserve Kenmore as a historic heritage of Fredericksburg, presided over the meeting at which State regents from more than half the Union's Commonwealths reported activities.

Debt Cut to $13,200.

At a meeting of the advisory committee at the Mansfield Hall Country Club last night it was announced a $3,400 debt reduction last year leaves the standing debt of the shrine at $13,200, to which it has been reduced from more than $100,000 in less than ten years. The regents were invited to hold their next meeting at the New York City home of Mrs. Harris Childs, New York State regent.

The advisory committee, henceforth to be known as the board of regents, made plans to purchase the house in the rear of Kenmore, if reasonable price arrangements can be negotiated, in order to restore the old sunken gardens of the shrine. A set of Kenmore plates, to bear a picture of Kenmore, and a reproduction of the old Adams design will be ordered by the association from Wedgewood, noted British porcelain manufacturer.

Mrs. Fleming Reelected.

Kenmore officers reelected include Mrs. Vivian Minor Fleming, president; Mrs. C. O'Connor Goolrick, vice president; Mrs. Thomas N. Taliaferro, second vice president; Mrs. H. H. Smith, National secretary; Mrs. S. P. Powell, recording secretary; Mrs. Charles Wattleworth, registrar; Miss Sally N. Gravatt, local treasurer, and Mrs. H. A. Whitbeck, National treasurer.

Special regents present included Mrs. Thomas B. Wheelwright, of Buckhead Springs, Va., regent for restoration of gardens; Mrs. Robert M. Littlejohn, of New York, regent for organization of States, and Mrs. Carl Melchers, of Falmouth, regent for reclamation of grounds.

State regents attending the meeting included Mrs. Kelly Evans, Virginia; Mrs. Thomas N. Taliaferro, District of Columbia; Mrs. Harris R. Childs, New York; Mrs. Theodore Strawn, Florida; Mrs. Robert J. Johnston, Iowa; Mrs. Charles Pillsbury, Minnesota; Mrs. Peter Arrington, North Carolina; Mrs. Benjamin A. Morton, Tennessee; Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby, Massachusetts; Mrs. Price Cross, Texas; Mrs. Key Pittman, Nevada; Mrs. Emmet C. Gudger, Montana; Mrs. Frank Stranahan, Ohio; Mrs. Francis B. Crowninshield, Delaware; Mrs. Crawford Tor Johnson, Alabama; Mrs. Francis Parkinson Keyes, New Hampshire; Mrs. Edmund B. Ball, Indiana; Mrs. Charles Channing Allen, Missouri; Mrs. Samuel Price, West Virginia; Mrs. John Weinmann, Arkansas; Mrs. Joseph Hume, Louisiana, and Mrs. Robert Henry, Mississippi.

Judges to Confer About Phone Rate

Baltimore, May 8 (Spl.).—Three Federal judges will meet here tonight in a final conference on the rate case of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., heard in Federal court here several weeks ago.

Jurists who will confer include Judge Morris A. Soper, of the United States Court of Appeals; Judge William C. Coleman and Judge W. Calvin Chestnut, the latter two district judges for Maryland.

It is reported the judges are prepared to rule on the case within three days. The hearings were based largely on the methods used by the Public Service Commission of Maryland in valuing the company's properties in the State.

Shore Kidnap Attempt Leads To Wide Hunt

10-Year-Old Boy, Lured to Automobile, Is Saved by Police.

Easton, Md., May 8 (Spl.).—While squads of police searched vainly today for a man accused of attempting to kidnap a 10-year-old boy, mothers of small children kept their youngsters indoors.

The boy who narrowly escaped kidnaping, Jack Casson, son of a railway mail clerk, and a companion of about the same age who gave the alarm after he disappeared, were so frightened that they have been able to give police little help in the search.

According to Jack's story, he and his companion were approached on the street by a colored man last night, who offered Jack money to help him unload his auto. The two boys went to an isolated spot near the Pennsylvania Railroad yards, and there the man ordered the other boy to leave. He told Jack to accompany him down the tracks.

Jack and his friend had scented trouble in advance, and Jack had told the other boy to call police if he did not return in 20 minutes. When he did not, his friend went to a store, told what had happened, and the proprietor phoned police headquarters.

Two police cars were sent. When the man saw them approaching, he ran.

Jack said the man had dragged him toward a waiting auto and police believed he intended to abduct the boy and hold him for ransom.

Women Indorse Mrs. J. S. Harvey

Clarksburg, W. Va., May 8 (Spl.). Opening its annual convention here today, the executive board and council of the West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs indorsed Mrs. John S. Harvey, of Huntington, for recording secretary of the general federation.

The recommendation goes before the delegates tomorrow. Mrs. Harvey is a director of the General Federation for West Virginia and past State president.

Plans for enlarging the federation scholarship fund were discussed.

More Roads Seek To Keep Low Fare

Norfolk, Va., May 8 (Spl.).—Railroads with headquarters at Norfolk will apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission to continue until December 31, 1934, the 1½-cent a mile passenger fare for coaches and 3 cents for Pullman, following permission granted the Southern Railway.

J. F. Dalton, traffic manager of the Norfolk Southern, today said that line would ask continuance of the low fare. Seaboard Air Line officials indicated the same course and other roads were expected to follow suit.

Virginia ABC Wine Cargo Is Hijacked

2,000 Cases of Cognac to Arrive Today; Wine Cost $25,000.

Receipts From Licenses for Dealers Exceed $60,000.

Richmond, May 8 (Spl.).—While Virginia's Alcoholic Beverage Control Board was busy today ordering 900 cases of imported wines, its first order of 176 cases of domestic wines, valued at $1,906, was being hijacked in New York, the board was advised this afternoon.

The order will be duplicated. Meanwhile, 40 cases of cognac arrived from New York and were placed in the new warehouse. A carload of 2,000 cases is expected tomorrow, with more due the first of next week, when the first stores may be opened.

The wine ordered today is expected to arrive the latter part of the week, and cost the board $25,000.

Receipts from wine and beer licenses have been more than sufficient to cover the overhead of the department, despite a growing pay roll and expense account. License receipts have passed the $60,000 mark. Receipts from wine orders totaled $1,337 the first day of operation and are expected to continue at this rate for quite a while, as the wine drinkers accumulate supplies.

Some of the $60,000 taken in on account of wine and beer licenses will have to be refunded because not all of the applications—about 3,000 thus far—can be granted. But meanwhile the board has had the use of the money, and it has served to maintain its appropriations unimpaired.

Orders for spirits and wines with which to stock the State stores, therefore, will make the first big dent in the board's appropriation.

These first orders—amounting to about $125,000—are being delivered and paid for this week, and if the turnover of the State stores is as rapid as the wine turnover thus far, no very large amount of capital may be tied up.

Virginia's first order for whisky is considered a cautious one, the board having chosen only a few brands of familiar liquors in an attempt to avoid a large warehouse reserve.

The Pennsylvania ABC Board recently had to hold a clearance sale to get rid of slow-moving supplies, and the Virginia board wishes to dodge any such necessity.

West Virginia Dry Plan State Battle

Drive Mapped to Defeat Repeal in November.

Charleston, W. Va., May 8 (Spl.). Plans were made today at a State convention of the United Dry Forces of West Virginia at the Baptist Temple here to carry on a vigorous campaign to retain the prohibition amendment in the State constitution at the polls this fall.

The convention, representing a union of churches, the Antisaloon League and other temperance organizations of the State, declared one of its functions to be that of recommending "dry candidates to the voters." It voted appointment of a State executive board of two members from each senatorial district and five at large to lead the and the board was directed to see first against repeal in November that an organization of dry forces is formed in every county.

In a keynote addres, Charles E. Carrigan, Moundsville lawyer and former Republican State chairman, warned the dry advocates that "there appears to be an inclination to surrender without any fight."

My comrades, on the village street, talk much of foreign things; of ruin, bitter and complete, that's wrought by bughouse kings. "This Mussolini is a threat that points at us from Rome;" I made reply, "Already yet, we've grief enough at home. Why worry over brands of woe that crowd the distant hills, when here at home we've row on row of plain and fancy ills?" One says, "This Hitler is a frost, a menace, fore and aft; we must avoid, at any cost, his vile and sinful graft. It Hitlerism gets its grip on this, our native land, we'll see our treasured bulwarks skip, and freedom will be canned." And I reply, "That Hitler guy costs me no sleepless nights; I look around with jaundiced eye upon our native plights. The foreign tyrant, king or chief, may show a mental kink; we have all standard brands of grief, that will fade or shrink. A thousand things demand our tears, as drearily we go; why search through other hemispheres for novelties in woe? Our native statesman bravely springs pure bunk in silver tones; why worry o'er the ten-cent kings on bargain counter thrones? While there's a mortgage on my hall, while hens refuse to lay, I do not care what may befall 10,000 miles away. Our home grown griefs are hard to beat, they're in a class alone, and Europe, ancient and effete, is welcome to her own."

Burrows Gets 75, Taking Golf Lead

Leads Pitt, Fuchs by Two Shots in First Day's Round.

Only 4 in Field of 60 Crack 80 at Indian Spring Tourney.

TED BURROWS, former public links golf champion, scored a 75 yesterday to assume the lead in the first day's qualifying round of the Indian Spring Country Club invitation tournament.

The municipal star shot a 38—37, four over par, with a five on the same home hole, to lead Harry Pitt, of Manor, defending champion, and Louis Fuchs, of the host club, by two shots each.

Putting raggedly on a number of holes, Pitt went out in 38 and came back in 39. The Moose needed a par 4 on the eighteenth for a tie with Burrows, but played a couple fo erratic shots in the fairway, and wound up with a 6. Fuchs firitted away his chances by taking six storkes on the tenth and five on the 185-yard fourth, and finished with 39—38.

Connely Makes 79.

Another municipal golfer, John (Russ) Connelly, found himself entrenched in fourth place by virtue of his 39—40—79. Connelly was the only other golfer in an opening day field of 60 to crack 80.

Craig McKee, Indian Spring champion, and diminutive Hickman Greene, of Argyle, carded 80's each. McKee finished disastrously, shooting 6—6—5 on the last three holes. Greene, former Louisiana State University golf captain, shot a smooth 37, two over par, for the outgoing side, and then went beserk with his shots on the stretch for a 43.

The scoring was alarmingly high for a course that literally was taken apart by its seams during the Maryland State Amateur championship, which Roger Peacock won last summer. Even M. Parker Nolan, who ordinarily scores well at Indian Spring, took an 81, his 43 on the incoming nine ruining an otherwise fair first nine. J. W. Harvey, jr., of Manor, also scored an 81.

Peculiar First Nine.

Burrows had a peculiar first nine. He started with a quintet of fives, representing one over on each hole, and then played the next four in two under, with birds on the seventh and ninth. Burrows also bagged a deuce on the fourteenth, a hole that gave the boys plenty of heartaches yesterday.

That 75 will not stand as the medal in the face of today's bombardment from the stars, is the opinion of golfing observers. Peacock, Tommy Belshe, Tommy Webb, John Shorey, Gene Vinson and Luther Steward, jr., will be among the flock of seige guns who will compete today.

Chisox May Leave Al Simmons Here

Injured Outfielder Reported Out of Danger.

Al Simmons, White Sox outfielder, whose head collided with a ball thrown by Joe Cronin in last Sunday's Washington-Chicago game, may not accompany his team when it leaves for New York tonight, although X-ray photographs, taken yesterday, when Simmons was hurried to Garfield Hospital, showed no skull fracture.

The outfielder has been suffering from nausea and headaches, and while he is reported to be resting comfortably, the White Sox may let him recuperate here for a day or two. Definite decision will be made this morning.

No Limit Placed on Rounds By District Boxing Chiefs

Heine Miller Is Named Secretary as Board Is Sworn In.

LEGALIZED boxing in Washington officially cut its eye teeth yesterday as the three members of the new Boxing Commission were sworn in by the District Commissioners, received their final instructions, held their first formal meeting, elected a chairman and appointed a secretary in less time than it takes Max Baer to become involved in a lawsuit. Lucien Vandoren, the legal light of the commission, was the chairman elected and Maj. Harvey L. Miller, long prominent in boxing circles, was appointed secretary to the group.

Regulations Made.

Boxing in Washington will operate under the following regulations temporarily drawn up by Maj. Miller and awaiting formal adoption by the commission tomorrow night:

1. A 5 per cent "cut" to be levied on the gross gate receipts of all boxing shows, in the form of a permit to operate each program. This will provide working funds for the commission and will go to pay the expenses of the secretary, clerical force, inspectors, &c.

2. The commission will be responsible for the appointment and payment of all referees, gate inspectors and other officials necessary to the proper conduct of boxing.

3. There will be no limitation on the number of rounds for a bout. This lack of restriction will permit the holding of championship bouts here, if public interest justifies them.

4. No relative of a commisioner or promoter will be permitted to manage boxers.

5. No referee may be "imported" for any specific bout. This clause is aimed at champions and near-champions who sometimes insist on bringing their own arbiter to protect their interests.

6. The "responsible" or bonded party conducting a boxing match must be a resident of the District of Columbia. This regulation will not prohibit a promoter from bringing in a matchmaker from any part of the country.

7. Any acceptable referee will be licensed by the commission regardless of his residence An applicant's suitability for refereeing will be determined by an examination before the commission.

8. Amateur boxers will not escape the license fee, as the law requires all boxers to be licensed. A special license will be issued to amateurs for a $1 fee. Professional boxers' licenses will cost $5, seconds', $5; referees', $25, and a $25 a year license will be required to operate a club.

Bridges Hurls 5-1 Victory For Tigers

BOSTON, May 8 (AP).—Tom Bridges, Detroit's right-handed ace, cast a spell on the slugging Red Sox, including Carl Reynolds, the American League's leading batter, today to give the Tigers a 5-to-1 victory. It was the first time this season that Reynolds has gone hitless.

Henry Johnson opened for Boston and lasted seven innings, giving the Tigers all of their hits and runs. Bridges held the Sox to six hits, four of whichc were scattered.

The veteran, Herb Pennock, replaced Johnson in the eighth and tamed the Tigers, too late, however, to help the Boston cause.

Pirates Win Finale From Dodgers, 5-2

Pittsburgh, May 8 (AP).—Bill Swift stiffened up after a bad start today and shut out the Dodgers with three hits in the last seven innings to give Pittsburgh a 5-to-2 victory and a clean sweep of the three-game series.

In the second Tony Cuccinello smacked a homer and Al Lopez put over the other Brooklyn run on his single and Van Mungo's double. From then on Swift was invincible, while the Pirates hit Mungo hard and often. Gus Suhr tied the score with a triple in the third, making the seventeenth consecutive game in which he has hit safely. Two walks and Earl Grace's single brought the winning run in the sixth and Tommy Thevenow drove in two more in the seventh.

Chattanooga Sends Nats Catcher

Ed Phillips to Report; Sewell's Finger to Be Realligned.

Burke and Gaston Pitch Today; Travis Will Don Uniform.

By Frank H. Young.

WITH only Elmer Klumpp, who was an outfielder with Chattanooga last year, available as a catcher, the Nats made arrangements with the lookouts to have Eddie Phillips, their first-string receiver, temporarily transferred here. Ed, who is about 32 years of age, has had plenty of experience, having once toiled with the Detroit Tigers, New York Yankees and Pittsburgh Pirates, not to mention a number of minor league clubs. He is not a good hitter, but is a mighty handy man from a defensive viewpoint. He is scheduled to arrive here tonight and likely will see action in tomorrow's opening game against the t. Louis Browns.

To fill Phillips' place at Chattanooga, Wally Dunham, second-string receiver of the Albany International Leaguers, will be temporarily shifted. Dunham will head for Chattanooga by way of Washington and will stick around the Nats bench today to see whether anything happens to Klumpp. In that event, it is possible President Clark Griffith could make a "quicker than the eye can follow" transfer and use Dunham in the Nat line-up.

Sewell Takes Ether.

With Cecil Travis discharged from the hospital and a guest at yesterday's game, the catching department has its innings in the Nats' battles againt casualties. Luke Sewell, whose injured finger was almost forgotten, except by the player himself, this morning takes the ether to have the digit realligned. The club physician is certain that the finger is not broken, his contention being that it has been hurt so many previous times that it simply will not heal up on its own accord.

As straightening a crooked and already sore finger is anything but pleasant, Luke will be given an anesthetic, the pressure will be applied and, if he lives through this, all he will have to do is to guard it carefully from future injuries while it is healing. Just how much longer he will be kept idle can not be estimated until after today's treatment.

Berg's Injury Serious.

Moe Berg, the second-stringer, who pulled a charley horse Monday, tried to do a little work yesterday with his right leg tightly bound, but he showed plainly that the hurt is more serious than at first thought and so he will be missing for several more days.

Phillies Blister Cubs For 18 Hits, Win, 13-6

Chicago, May 8 (AP).—Philadelphia blistered three Cub pitchers for 18 hits and a 13-to-6 victory today and shoved the early-season pace-setters down to third place in the National League standing.

The victory was the Phillies' only one of the three-game series, and they made the most of it. Lynn Nelson, making his first start of the season for the Cubs, was batted out of action before a man was out in the opening inning. He made his exit after granting three hits, including a long home run by Ethan Allen, and a base on balls.

Higgins' Triple Brings 2-0 Victory to A's

Philadelphia, May 8 (AP).—Pinky Higgins, Connie Mack's flashy third baseman, and Joe Cascarella, big rookie hurler, combined today to defeat the Cleveland Indians, 2 to 0, and give the Athletics their second straight triumph over the Tribe.

Cascarella held the Clevelanders to three hits for his best mound performance of the campaign to date. Pinky Higgins' triple sent Bob Johnson across with the first run in the seventh, and a moment later, a passed ball enabled Pinky to score the game's only other tally.

Lloyd Brown, hurling for the Tribe, blanked the A's until the seventh. In the eighth, he was relieved by Hildebrand.

Reds Conquer Giants by 6-Run Rally

CINCINNATI, May 8 (AP).—The Reds ended their losing streak at eight straight games today by manufacturing a six-run rally against Fred Fitzsimmons and Joe Bowman in the first inning and defeating the Giants 7 to 3.

Seven men want to the plate in the first before Fitzsimmons was relieved and three more before the inning ended. The rest of the way Bowman allowed the Reds only one unearned run. Don Brennan, making his first start for Cincinnati, was wild but effective, giving seven hits and six walks.

No Saint and Our Moe Winners in Divisions of Feature Handicap at Pimlico

Both Halves Of Race to Choices

Claim of Foul Against Our Mae Disallowed; Litzenberger Hurt.

Daniel Soot Captures Chase Handily From Escapade.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, May 8. Two divisions of the Salisbury Claiming Handicap marked the high spots of today's program here and both resulted in victories for favorites. In the first division, No Saint, the property of Mrs. John Hay Whitney, galloped home two lengths in advance of the field, while the second division found Our Mae leading the pack to the wire by a length. No Saint had the better time, dashing the 4½ furlongs in 0:54 4-5 to the 0:55 1-5 shown by Our Mae. Likewise, No Saint paid the better mutuel, supplying a $4.70 payoff to $3.90 for the filly.

Both scored front-running victories. No Saint, handled by Bobby Jones, was kept out of a jam that marked the first turn and then went to the front, where Rustic Joe and Ogle did their best to catch the Whitneyite. However, Jones drew away to a five-length lead in the stretch and was pulling in at the finish.

Filly Needs Shaking Up.

Jockey Joe Jacobs rode Our Mae and had to give the filly a shaking-up at the start in order to go to the front. However, Our Mae soon took command and, with Tracker, Workman up, and Color Bearer supplying the contention. In the stretch, Yowell brought Color Bearer up on the rail and Our Mae swerved a bit, blocking the Labrot gelding. Yowell went up to tell it to the stewards, but the official lights were soon shown.

Little Eddie Litzenberger, who has been riding in sensational form this year, hurt his leg at the barrier while riding Ogle in the first division of the race. His injury was not serious, but he was forced to cancel his mounts for the day.

Daniel Soot Wins Chase.

Daniel Soot, jumping and running for Mrs. F. M. Gould, triumphed in the Old Dominion Steeplechase. The veteran, in charge of Willie Hunter, crossed the finish line almost 3 lengths in advance of Escapade, with Regan McKinney, the gentleman rider, in the saddle. Third money went to Matagain, with Ed Mitchell aboard. There were two falls and one lost rider in the race over the 13-jump course. Maplevale, the early leader, tumbled at the sixth jump and Zermatt followed suit. Thereafter, Daniel Soot held to the lead by a variety of margins and held Escapade, the even-money favorite, safe. Daniel Soot was a lukewarm second choice and paid a $6.30 mutuel.

TOYTIME, rated off the early pace, swung to the outside when improving her position, took command when straightened into the home stretch and, under strong pressure, just lasted to stall off CAERLEON. Latter, slower than usual to settle in his stride, secured racing room on the inside and then closed full of run. PENNYWISE, under steadying restraint early, made a determined effort entering the home stretch, but weakened under his weight approaching the finish. PORTEUSE closed a good gap from a slow beginning. INSTIGATOR lacked early foot. BALLY BAY and WASHOUT raced themselves into submission setting the early pace. AUNT FLOR was never a factor and was forced to race wide.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NO SAINT, $4.70, $3.40, $2.50; RUSTIC JOE, $10.60, $5.50; OGLE, $3.20.

NO SAINT, avoiding crowding at the first turn, sprinted into a commanding lead when straightened into the home stretch and finished hard held at the end. RUSTIC JOE, prominent early, continued gamely for the closing test. OGLE suffered early interference, secured racing room on the inside and then closed fiamely. BEGINNERS BAIT was badly crowded soon after the start. He recovered and closed willingly. CARMANCHITA had a rough trip. GOLD SWEEP displayed early speed. SUMATRA had a rough passage early. DILATE went wide. The race was not truly run.

THIRD RACE—Two miles. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Old Dominion Steeplechase. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:15. Off at 3:16. Winner, Mrs. F. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DANIEL SOOT, $6.30, $3.10, $2.90; ESCAPADE, $2.80, $2.40; MATAGAIN, $4.00.

DANIEL SOOT, nicely handled and reserved off the pace for the first mile, took command when ready and, steadied to all of his fences thereafter, drew out when shaken up in the last half mile. ESCAPADE struck several of his fences in the first mile, made a bad landing at the ninth fence, then came willingly under severe punishment. MATAGAIN made a bold challenge going to the twelfth fence and then held on gamely. NAYLOR showed a nice effort for the first mile. ALPHEUS and ZERMATT fell at the sixth fence, and GLANEUR at the third.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds, foaled in Maryland. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:45. Off at 3:48. Winner, C. J. Meister's ch. f. (3), by Canter—Thomasine. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24, 0:48 3-5, 1:14 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CANTERSINE, $4.00, $2.70, $2.30; TIGHT WAD, $3.80, $3.40; CANTROUD, $7.60.

CANTERSINE, quickest to begin, was taken under mild restraint early, then responded strongly when shaken up and outstayed TIGHT WAD. Latter slugished when attempting to secure racing room on the inside of the winner at the turn out of the back stretch, went to the outside thereafter and closed determinedly. A claim of foul was made and not allowed. CANTROUD, slow to get going reached contention when weaving his way between horses and then closed willingly on the inside. ASKE was hard ridden, but could not menace the leaders. TREDHAVEN had no mishaps. CANCEL displayed speed in the first half mile.

FIFTH RACE—Four and one-half furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. The Salisbury Second Division. For 2-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:14. Off at 4:18. Winner, E. K. Bryson's ch. f. (2), by Our General—Mae Quince. Trained by H. Baker. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:48 2-5, 0:55 1-5.

OUR MAE, away in the first flight and displaying nice speed, resisted early contention from TRACKER and had something in reserve at the end. COLOR BEARER went close up, saved ground and came with a rush on the inside. TRACKER was hard ridden and was under punishment in the closing drive. BARCAROLLE could not better his position at any stage. HOT GRIDDLE went evenly. The others were outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. The Ridgely. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:46. Off at 4:49. Winner, W. SUNNY TOM, forced to race on the outside after being outrun to the first turn, worked his way up steadily and, coming strongly in the late stages after gaining command outstayed LAURETTA NASH. Latter had more speed than usual, raced TIME ENOUGH into defeat, then held on well when challenged. KIBITZER secured racing room on the inside in the final six furlongs and closed with good courage. MUSKODAY went forwardly and raced gamely. HIGH SOCKS, shuffled back to the first turn, circled his field to close a good gap. CHIEFS TROUBADOR was never a factor. BELLE FILLE failed to respond at any stage.

SEVENTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:15. Off at 5:17½. Winner, Jersey Stable's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—POSTSCRIPT, $4.10, $3.40, $2.50; LAUREL MISS, $6.10, $3.90; SOME GOOD, $3.50.

POSTSCRIPT, as usual slow to break, reached contention with good speed, came around the pacemakers when straightened into the home stretch, and drew out stoutly after displacing LAUREL MISS. Latter showed keen early speed to set the pace all around, but faltered fast in the closing furlong. SOME GOOD, in the first flight from the start, was blocked midway of the home stretch, came to the outside thereafter, and held on well. SCOTCH PEPPER raced strongly early, but tired after reaching the stretch. MAIN CHANCE raced in company. CLONARD broke sluggishly. NIGHTS END lacked early speed. SAINT KITTS tired.

ARAB, in his best form, was rated within striking distance of WORTHINGTON for the first six furlongs, took command when ready, then drew out as if much the best when shaken up. COME SEVEN, kept forwardly placed, responded readily when put to a drive, was no match for the winner. WORTHINGTON was steadied along until challenged, but weakened steadily. BROWN SINNER showed a good effort. JIM ROBIN failed to respond when hard ursed. INFILEE was done early. BISKO appeared to sulk.

Sullivan Hurls Eastern to 10-1 Win

Moves Toward Capture of Inter-High Crown Over McKinley.

PLAYING like true champions behind the superb twirling of Lefty Joe Sullivan, Eastern High's smooth-working nine yesterday struck another blow home toward gaining the inter-high crown by clearly outclassing McKinley Tech at Eastern Stadium to win in a walk, 10 to 1.

It was Eastern's third straight series victory and leaves only Roosevelt standing between the championship Griffith Cup and the Lincoln Parkers. Tech, present holder of the title, dropped to a tie with Western to fourth place in the standings.

While Sullivan's southpaw slants were holding the Tech offensive in complete submission with two hits and rolling up a total of 13 strikeouts, the Eastern bats rattled a merry tune of 14 hits off three Tech pitchers, one of which was a terrific four-base clout to left by Joe Keegin in the third.

Stocks Cheer Silver Move With Advance

Trading Brightens as List Climbs 1.9; Sales Cut to 1,948,110 Shares.

New York, May 8 (AP).—Stocks brightened today in the wake of silver developments at Washington, and net gains of 1 to 5 points stood in contrast to the market's severe shakeout of Monday.

No doubt traders used the silver news as an excuse for covering short commitments; it also seemed probable that the market had become oversold, putting it in position for a rally.

At any rate, it was not long deciding which way to move when it learned that the White House and silver bloc Senators had talked over a two-fold plan for the white metal and that something seemed likely to result from the conference.

Conference in Washington.

As outlined in Washington dispatches, silver would be monetized at not more than 50 cents an ounce; it has been a year and a half since the quotation for spot metal was at that level.

Wall street went home without much definite information on just what, if anything, had been agreed to at the White House, but it was assumed that a legislative program for silver would be formulated and this appeared to have revived the "up again, down again" inflationary psychology which recently had been rather decidedly down.

Metal shares had a generous appreciation, led by U. S. Smelting, which closed with a gain of more than 5 points. American Smelting rose 3, while gold stocks caught the spirit of the occasion, helped partly by Dome's extra.

Trade News Meager.

Trade news affecting individual issues was somewhat meager. General Motors' April sales figures showed a smaller improvement over March than is usual, but the total was the best for any month since April, 1931. The stock's advance was fractional; perhaps the failure of directors to vote an extra yesterday tended to hold it back.

American Telephone turned strong for a change. Its April gross from long lines business was up about a million dollars over last year and this, coupled with the rise in installations, may have made traders think twice about the possibility of a dividend cut. Farm implement stocks strengthened with wheat. Many of the industrials were up 1 to 2 points or so. Transactions totaled 1,948,110 shares.

April shipments of U. S. Steel Corporation will be published Thursday and are expected to reflect the expanded operations, that is, a gain over March seems logical. "American Metal Market" says the production increase is largely due to stocking by consumers; it estimates consumption at around 53 per cent of capacity, placing current operations at about 60 per cent, the difference representing the movement to build up stocks of material.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Evidence Indicates the Administration Has Lost Much of Its Early Determination to Raise Commodity Prices to 1923-26 Level.

By Ralph West Robey.

In the opinion of many observers it is becoming increasingly clear that the Administration has discarded its early determination to raise commodity prices. If they are right in this interpretation of recent developments it is an alteration in governmental policy of the most fundamental character. In fact one may say that it virtually undermines a large portion of the New Deal program of the first year. That program specifically was designed to raise commodity prices, for, so it was said, only through higher prices could our debt burden be carried and the business and financial system restored to a state of solvency.

Whether there was ever any good reason for such a point of view is open to serious question. Most of those who had been working in the field of price statistics insisted that the important factor involved was not to raise the whole level of values by any given amount but to eliminate the disparities that had developed. They held that once prices were brought back into a workable equilibrium the debt burden, or such portion of it as should be permitted to last, could be taken care of without unbearable difficulties.

Administration Refused To Accept This Reasoning.

The Administration, however, would have none of this line of argument. For reasons that never were made clear logically, and that could not be supported statistically, it adopted the idea that only by getting the entire price structure at a higher level could we have any real recovery and secure any reasonable justice between debtors and creditors. This higher level, while never stated officially, was generally understood to be that of 1923-1926. It seemed to be assumed that if prices could be returned to that point all our troubles would be over.

Accordingly, one elaborate scheme after another was adopted for increasing the price level—crop restriction with payments of hundreds of millions of dollars to farmers, Government lending at values above the market on stable commodities, heavy expenditures through public works, writing-up of costs of production through the NRA, devaluation of the dollar, &c., &c. Each of these plans, admittedly, had other purposes than just to raise prices, but by and large none of them could have been justified as a part of any recovery program that did not have as a basic premise the desirability of a higher price level.

Conclusion Would Indicate Revision of Recovery Plans.

If observers are correct in concluding that the determination to raise prices has been abandoned, therefore, it must be evident that there should be a wholesale revision of the recovery program. It still could contain the AAA, the PWA, the NRA, &c., but these would be become of lesser importance. In their place, as the heart of the recovery problem, would be plans for getting an increased volume of business activity through greater encouragement to private capital, through the removal of restrictions on private initiative, and through an abandonment of, what usually is called, the drive to the left.

Those who think that price-raising has been discarded base their opinions largely upon such evidence as they see, or think they see, of such a shift in the Administration program. In addition they point out that Administration spokesmen no longer talk about higher prices as a requisite of recovery. On the contrary they say almost nothing on the subject, placing all of the emphasis upon other factors.

All of this is, it seems to me, important evidence. It clearly indicates that there no longer is the same determination in Administration circles that prevailed last October when the President, in announcing the Warren gold purchase plan, unreservedly committed himself to raising prices. At the same time I can not help but feel that it still is too early to accept as certain that prices now are only a secondary consideration of the Administration. In other words, in spite of the evidence indicating such a change of view, I think the Administration still quickly would come to the aid of prices should there be a substantial slump.

Bonds Retreat One-Tenth in Spite of Rallies

Prices Closed Mixed With Sales Volume Cut to $12,015,000.

New York, May 8 (AP).—Bonds were mildly irregular at the close of trading today despite some substantial late rallies in the secondary groups apparently occasioned by a brisk upturn in stocks.

The trading volume dwindled to $12,015,000, par value, against $13,634,000 yesterday and the average for 60 domestic corporate loans eased one-tenth of a point to 86.5.

There was little news that might have directly affected senior securities.

Conference on Silver.

The conference of Senate silver advocates with the President and the subsequent report that the Chief Executive had outlined a two-way program for rehabilitation of the metal, attracted much interest in the financial district.

It was thought probable, however, that only "permissive" legislation would receive Administrative approval at this time.

U. S. Government loans were steady to firm and not particularly active. Several of the Treasuries edged up to further "new highs," with gains ranging from one-thirty-second to six-thirty-seconds of a point. Liberty 3½s and first 4¼s were slightly hig

Wheat Climbs 1¼ to 1⅝ on Silver Outlook

Broad General Purchasing From East Follows Roosevelt Stand.

Chicago, May 8 (AP).—Kiting upward almost 3 cents a bushel in flurried buying late today, the wheat market responded briskly to reports of prospective nationalization of silver.

Washington advices telling of developments in regard to President Roosevelt's silver policy were construed as decidedly stimulating as to wheat values.

The new soaring of wheat was from earlier low price levels that were associated with indications of moisture relief Northwest and West. Subsequent official reports, however, showed rainfalls were insufficient to be of any material assistance to wheat crops.

Wheat closed strong at nearly the day's maximum figures, 1¼ to 1⅝ above yesterday's finish; corn, ⅜ off to ¼ up; oats, unchanged to ½ higher, and provisions unchanged to a decline of 2 cents.

Broad general purchasing which accompanied the late advance of wheat was led by houses with connections East and Northwest. Some of the purchase orders were based on word of dust storms in North Dakota and Canada.

Mainly, however, trade attention was focused on silver developments at Washington, especially the White House statement of results reached at a conference between President Roosevelt and Senate advocates of rehabilitation of silver.

Statement on Silver.

The gist of the White House statement as to the silver conference was generally known in the wheat pit well before trading was ended. Satisfaction of the silverite Senators was also accorded full significance as a bullish factor, and for at least the time being the majority of wheat traders were content not to await more explicit details.

Aside from bullish encouragement regarding silver and from apparent immediate insufficiency of rains, the day's news was mainly bearish, including forecasts of widespread showery and cooler temperatures tonight. There were also Liverpool cables emphasizing likelihood of continued liberal shipments of wheat from Argentina, despite the London world quota agreement.

Better weather for corn, especially in Iowa, tended to make corn and oats prices lag as compared with wheat. Plowing and corn planting were shown to be progressing at a rapid rate.

Provisions averaged lower, influenced by downturns of hog values.

U. S. Tobacco Gains Popularity in Cuba

The growing popularity in Cuba of a domestically made American-type cigarette is causing concern both to Cuban tobacco growers and to Havana cigarette manufacturers, according to a report from Consul L. R. Blohm, made public by the Commerce Department.

Two years ago an experiment was made by a large cigarette company in introducing a well-known Virginia-type tobacco into Cuba. Two crops of this tobacco have been harvested, processed and manufactured into a cigarette similar to the popular American brands. The new cigarette retails for 10 cents per package, as compared with 5 cents for the Cuban product. Because of the added competition, the report points out, American cigarettes are being imported into the Cuban market in constantly decreasing quantities.

Planters in the Pinar del Rio district have held several meetings to discuss protective measures to prohibit the sowing of American tobacco used for the manufacture of cigarettes, Consul Blohm stated.

Ostrich Feather Trade Revives In South Africa

The ostrich feather trade of South Africa, once an important item in the economic life of that country, is showing signs of improvement, according to a report to the Commerce Department from Trade Commissioner E. B. Lawson, Johannesburg. There is little likelihood, however, Lawson states, of a return to the boom days of the prewar period.

Large stocks of feathers, which have been held by owners and the once-prosperous cooperative organization remain to be liquidated before any marked improvement in the industry as a whole will be recorded. However, reports from overseas that ostrich feathers will figure prominently in the millinery styles this summer have already affected the Port Elizabeth market. Sales within the last few months have been well above those for the corresponding months of 1933. Since the beginning of the year there has been a steady expansion of the demand, particularly for wings, for which prices are now 40 per cent higher.

At the Port Elizabeth sales in January of this year, 3,151 pounds of ostrich feathers were sold, compared with 1,155 pounds in January, 1933. It is reported, Trade Commissioner Lawson declares, that the United States is buying ostrich feathers on a considerably larger scale.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Francois Andre Danican Philidor was the leading chess master of the middle eighteeenth century. He was a pupil of M. de Kermar, foremost player of the Cafe de la Regence in Paris, which for more than 100 years was the center of chess activities in France. Philidor was born in 1726, and when 21 years old he traveled to England, where he met and defeated Phillip Stamma, famous Arabian player, by eight games to one, with one draw. Although international tournaments were not held in those days as they are now, Philidor is conceded to have been the champion player of the world.

Shortly after his victory over Stamma he wrote his famous book on chess, "Analyze des echecs," which has been translated into more languages and printed in more editions than any other work on chess ever written.

The whirlpool discovered over the Georges Banks, 150 miles from Cape Cod, differed from all known whirlpools in that it swirled away from its center instead of toward the center.

The U. S. S. Hydrographer, whose crew discovered the strange whirlpool, was thrown off her course when she encountered it.

Tomorrow: Floating Skyscrapers.
